INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (•). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate ficed product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (•) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquérir les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.
2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.
3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.
4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.
5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

"How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?"

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.

Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

"Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?"

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

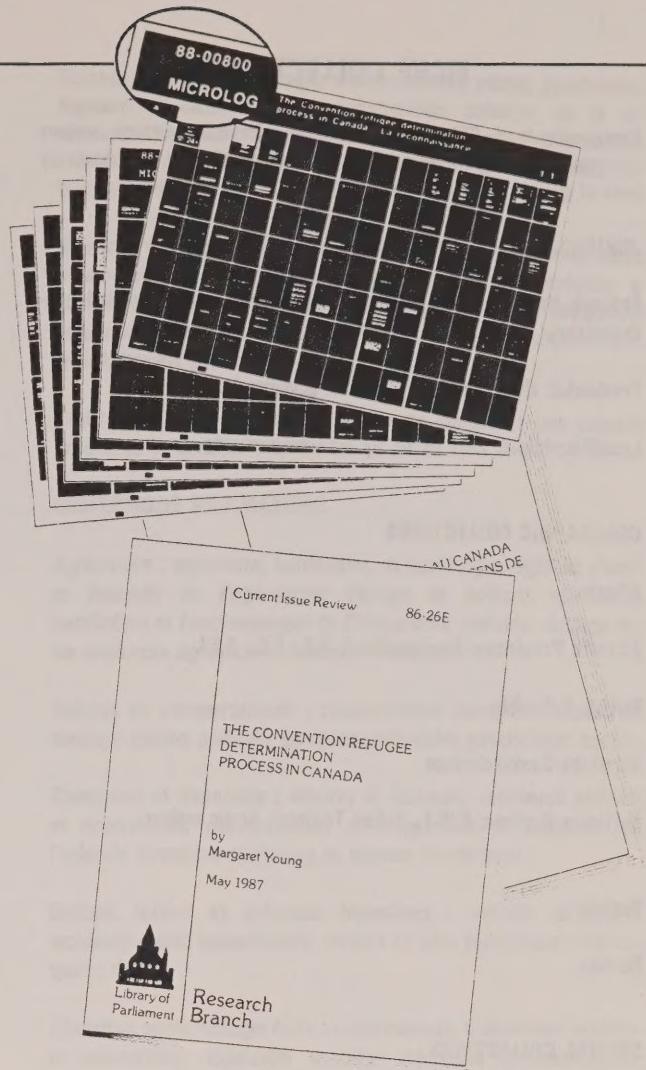

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

One of the most common techniques for routine measurement of carbon-14 in environmental samples calls for the absorption of carbon dioxide in a liquid scintillation cocktail composed of a Carbo-Sorb absorbent and a Permafluor scintillator fluid. This paper examines the effect of variations in sample preparation and storage on the counting efficiency for carbon-14 using the above cocktail, and recommends optimum conditions on the basis of the experimental measurements reported.

This book is a compilation of five papers on legal and constitutional issues of Aboriginal self-government. The first paper describes and assesses five perspectives in support of the right of Aboriginal self-government: prior occupancy, prior sovereignty, treaties, self-determination, and preservation of minority culture. The second provides Inuit perspectives on treaty rights and governance; the third and fourth discuss the inclusion of Metis under Section 91(24) of the 1867 Constitution Act. The final paper makes suggestions about how Aboriginal self-government could be implemented without any amendment of the Constitution of Canada. The authors discuss the nature of the powers that could be included in a self-government agreement, making extensive reference to the Yukon First Nation Self-Government Agreements. They also make recommendations regarding constitutional protection of self-government agreements and the development of Aboriginal constitutions.

The BC Life Skills Program was designed to educate students in six critical life skill areas. Effective use of the life skills developed through the Program will lead to a lifelong sense of self-worth, greater personal and interpersonal understanding, and constructive relationships with others. This booklet is the lesson organizer for the third of the six life skill areas: accessing and using information. The lessons in this booklet involve skills that engage students in such exercises as evaluating prior knowledge, formulating reflective questions, organizing and critically analyzing information, understanding and discussing varying perspectives, forming opinions, detecting bias, and applying information to solve complex problems. Each lesson contains such elements as curriculum organizers, outcomes, activities, cross-curricular and home-community connections, reproducible worksheets, and suggestions for student evaluation.

An Adaptive memory heuristic for a class of vehicle routing problems with minmax objective

By Bruce L. Golden, Gilbert Laporte and Éric D. Tailleur. Montréal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1995. ii, 15 p. : Bibl. (Publication / Université de Montréal. Centre de recherche sur les transports ; no. 95-74) MICROLOG 96-01403 (1 fiche)

This paper proposes a tabu search based heuristic for a class of routing problems with minimax objective. It first describes the algorithm for the minimax capacitated vehicle routing problem, consisting of determining a set of m vehicle routes of minimum total length, each starting and ending at a depot, such that each customer is visited exactly once and the total demand of any route does not exceed Q. The paper then shows the application of this algorithm to a special case of the above problem, the m-traveling salesman problem, in which Q is arbitrarily large, and also shows how the algorithm can be extended to solve the minimax version of the capacitated vehicle routing problem with multiple use of vehicles. Computational results are included.

The main purpose of the KTA-11 project was to evaluate the impact of target signature representation fidelity on radar guidance system performance. The project involved the United Kingdom, United States, Australia, and Canada. Each country used the identical seeker model and simulation scenarios for engagement simulation, but each developed its own radar signature model or series of models to use in conjunction with the simulation. The project then compared results from different signature models to determine the key issues in radar target signature modelling in the context of seeker design. This report presents the analysis of the Canadian simulation results of the KTA-11 project. It includes short descriptions of the various radar signature models used, scenarios examined, discussion of the analysis procedures, and comparisons of the Canadian results with those of other countries.

An Analysis of the impacts of a proposal to reduce the Northern Tax Benefit in Alberta

Edmonton : Northern Alberta Development Council, 1990. ii, 31 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-01414 (1 fiche)

Since the mid-1970s, the federal government has offered a tax benefit for selected employees to cover housing and living costs in the north. In 1986, a new program extended this benefit to about 70,000 northern Albertans, and some benefits were also subsequently extended to a further 82,500 in the Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie regions. This report examines the implications for northern Alberta if proposed changes to the Northern Tax Benefit are implemented. These changes involve changing the eligibility criteria to limit the benefit to those residing above 57.30 north latitude, where only 15,600 persons reside. The report reviews criticisms of the Northern Tax Benefit program from northern communities and associations, and the objectives of the program as a tool for northern development and recruitment of skilled workers. Finally, the report analyzes the economic impact of the new eligibility zone on family unit incomes.

The Canadian Navy has traditionally used the BS5500 British Standard Specification for Unfired Fusion Welded Pressure Vessels for assessing the structural integrity of pressure hulls. This memorandum develops the BS5500 design equations for interframe and overall compartment collapse of externally pressurized ring-stiffened vessels in a reliability analysis format. The analysis uses the CALREL reliability code with limit state equations to evaluate the effects of the various input parameters on the probability of pressure hull failure. The variables of particular interest include out-of-circularity, diving depth, and modelling uncertainty, which have a significant effect on the probability of failure. A recent set of model tests for overall compartment collapse is also used to evaluate the reliability analysis of the overall collapse limit state, and to indicate possible difficulties in assessing modelling uncertainty and target safety values.

One component study of the Newfoundland Oil Burn Experiment, conducted offshore in August 1993, was developed to determine the potential toxic effects to aquatic organisms that could result from in-situ burning of oil spills and how these effects compare to those from unburned oil. This paper presents results of studies comparing the chemistry and toxicity of background samples, pre-burn samples, and post-burn samples. The chemical analyses included identification of 24 polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons and determining total petroleum hydrocarbons. The toxicity tests conducted on laboratory-generated samples included the echinoderm sperm cell test, the echinoderm larvae test, the echinoderm cytogenetics test, the bivalve larvae test, and the inland silverside juvenile fish test. The same suite of tests, excluding the cytogenetics test, was conducted on the field-burn samples. The overall results indicate whether the potential for toxicity should be a factor preventing the use of in-situ burning.

It also examines the potential changes in timber supply stemming from uncertainties about forest growth and management actions. The appendices include a description of data inputs and assumptions used to derive the timber harvesting land base and to construct the timber supply model for the TSA timber supply review analysis; and tables and commentary that outline updates to the forest inventory planning file that were made before using the methods and inputs to derive the timber harvesting land base.

Dans ce bulletin, nous nous penchons sur la partie de la politique culturelle canadienne qui porte sur les arts, soit l'ensemble des actions de l'Etat qui ont un effet direct sur les artistes créateurs et les interprètes ainsi que sur les organismes artistiques au sein desquels les artistes exercent leur art. Nous y décrivons les principaux enjeux de la politique culturelle canadienne dans le secteur des arts et les principaux gestes posés par le gouvernement fédéral pour y répondre.

Assessing the efficiency of rapid transit configurations

By Gilbert Laporte, Juan A. Mesa and Francisco A. Ortega. Montréal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1995. ii, 11 p. : ill., Bibl. (Publication / Université de Montréal. Centre de recherche sur les transports ; no. 95-75) MICROLOG 96-01411 (1 fiche)

This paper analyzes the passenger/network effectiveness and the passenger/time effectiveness of eight basic rapid transit configurations. The analysis drops the assumption of uniformity (that all mode pairs on the network are equally likely origin-destination pairs) and introduces mode competition. A logit function is used for the modal split distribution, and the scenario modelled is a circular city with two concentric zones having different travel characteristics. The paper includes computational results and sensitivity analyses to indicate the robustness of the results.

An Assessment of the effects of concentration fluctuations on the penetration of toxic vapors through a carbon bed

By Eugene C. Yee. Ralston, AB : National Defence, Defence Research Establishment Suffield, 1995. ix, 22 p. : ill., Bibl. (Suffield memorandum / Defence Research Establishment Suffield ; no. 1457) MICROLOG 96-00792 (1 fiche)

This study uses a simple mathematical model for the penetration of a vapor through an adsorbent carbon bed to investigate the effects of naturally induced concentration fluctuations on the breakthrough time and the degree of penetration through the bed. The study presents results of computer simulations using a steady and a fluctuating inlet concentration with the same dosage over a fixed exposure time, showing the effect of concentration fluctuations on vapor penetration through a carbon bed. Assumptions used in the model include irreversible adsorption and a first-order local rate of removal with respect to the vapor concentration and the concentration of unoccupied adsorption sites. To simulate the performance of a filter under more realistic conditions, the model will have to be extended to incorporate a more realistic mechanism for the local rate of vapor removal in the bed.

La question de l'autonomie gouvernementale des autochtones a pris une importance particulière au cours des 15 dernières années, soit depuis que les autochtones de tout le pays cherchent à prendre en mains leurs institutions politiques et à exercer leur autorité dans une variété de secteurs. Ce document porte précisément sur l'autonomie gouvernementale des autochtones. Les points suivants sont examinés : contexte; la Loi sur les Indiens; le Comité spécial sur l'autonomie politique des Indiens; politique fédérale en matière d'autonomie gouvernementale; mesures législatives en vue de la reconnaissance de l'autonomie gouvernementale des autochtones; et, réforme constitutionnelle.

Ce document constitue une analyse critique des cinq justifications invoquées à l'appui du droit des autochtones à l'autonomie gouvernementale : l'occupation antérieure, la souveraineté antérieure, les traités, l'autodétermination et la préservation de la culture minoritaire. Il met en garde contre le recours exclusif au droit positif pour justifier la reconnaissance du droit des autochtones à l'autonomie gouvernementale tout en reconnaissant les limites d'un argument normatif, étant donné que la philosophie sociale ne cesse d'évoluer. L'étude soutient que chacune des perspectives exprime des vérités uniques sur la nature des droits ancestraux, mais que l'on ne peut s'appuyer sur aucune d'elles à l'exclusion des autres, car on risquerait de ne pas bien saisir l'importance des droits ancestraux en général, et du droit à l'autonomie gouvernementale en particulier.

By John I. Strickland. Ottawa : Dept. of Communications, Communications Research Centre, 1993. viii, 182 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. MICROLOG 96-00869 (3 fiche)

This report describes the development of a baseline system architecture designed to meet the basic requirements of an all-terrestrial backup communications system linking the Canadian North Warning System radar sites with the regional operations control center. The system consists of about 100 low-power digital repeaters, designed for installation using light helicopters. The report includes description of the design, development, and field testing of an experimental ultra-high-frequency (UHF) digital radio system built to demonstrate the system architecture. The system was installed and operated in the western Arctic to link two radar sites with the land telephone system at Inuvik. The system power comes from a combination of batteries and solar panels. The report presents results of signal strength tests and analyses conducted to obtain the characteristics of UHF propagation in the western Arctic for a variety of paths.

Victoria : The Province, 1995. 22 p. : ill., Bibl.
ISBN 0-7726-2676-6
MICROLOG 96-01274 (1 fiche)

This paper introduces a conservation plan which will help sustain salmon stocks in British Columbia. The paper begins with the challenge facing the province, namely the decline in salmon stocks, the increase in the percentage of spawning salmon populations at risk, and the decrease in suitable salmon habitat, notably in urban areas. The paper then reviews the importance of salmon to the province and the current management actions taken by the province to protect salmon habitat. Future legislative actions under consideration are also noted. The conservation plan focuses on the Urban Salmon Habitat Program, which has been developed to protect and restore habitat in urban areas. The Program, working in partnership with local districts and communities, will focus on implementing community-based stewardship projects such as habitat resource assessment and restoration of critical streams that are most subject to negative impacts of urban development.

This paper develops a belief-based view of ill-formed input in which ill-formed input in the dialogue between a natural language interface and a user is viewed as resulting from differences between their beliefs. The paper presents a classification of various mismatches of belief and their relationship to different forms of ill-formed input, which includes lexical problems such as misspelled words, bad word order, and missing words or phrases; semantic problems such as self-contradictory sentences; and contextual problems such as incoherent requests or continuations. The paper reviews the literature on ill-formed input, describes relevant work on belief-based approaches to dialogue and user modelling, and compares the proposed classification with two older classifications of ill-formed input. Finally, the paper discusses integration of the classification with belief modelling work.

The intent of this guidebook is to provide forest managers, planners, and field staff with a recommended process for meeting biodiversity objectives (both landscape-unit and stand-level) as required in the Forest Practices Code of British Columbia Act and Regulations. The practices presented in the guide are designed to reduce the impacts of forest management on biodiversity, within targeted social and economic constraints. The guide provides direction on applying biodiversity emphasis options at various levels, establishing biodiversity objectives for the landscape unit, designing a landscape unit to achieve those objectives, and addressing stand attributes to maintain biodiversity both in landscape-unit plans and (where biodiversity objectives for the landscape unit are absent) in forest development plans. The appendix contains a table of biogeoclimatic units, natural disturbance types and locations, an outline of important stand attributes, and a list of classes of wildlife trees.

The investigators measured sediment profiles of modal grain size, water content, salinity, redox potentials, ammonium, sulfides, sulfate, organic carbon and nitrogen, benthic dissolved oxygen and carbon dioxide flux, and macrofauna biomass at 22 stations in the region. Eleven sites were located under salmon net-pens and 11 sites at distances over 50 meters from the pens served as reference (control) locations. The report describes the sampling and analytical methods used and presents the data for the different variables measured in the study by station number in four appendices.

From the Mission on Science and Technology Policy for a Democratic South Africa ; with a foreword by Nelson R. Mandela and an afterword by David Kaplan ; edited by Marc Van Ameringen. Ottawa : International Development Research Centre, 1995. xv, 95 p. : Bibl. ISBN 0-88936-758-2
MICROLOG 96-01257 (2 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

This report, the third in a four-volume series that describes policy related processes undertaken by the International Development Research Centre in South Africa, details the work of the Centre-supported Mission on Science and Technology Policy for a Democratic South Africa. The report reviews the internal and external contexts of the Mission, the current state of science and technology and its institutions, the tertiary education sector, the agricultural research and industrial sectors, and government support of environmental issues. The report then discusses key issues related to science and technology policy, including accountability, affirmative action, research, and the military. The final sections offer suggestions on priorities for strategic research and recommendations on policy options, as well as a critical assessment of the Mission's work and its impact on the science and technology policy debate in South Africa.

The Caisse is an autonomous institution in its investment management operations that was formed in 1965 to manage the funds arising from various public pension and insurance plans. Its mandate is to ensure that the funds under its administration generate a profit through investments and also to support Quebec's economic development. To achieve these objectives it uses such investment vehicles as bonds, shares and convertible securities, mortgages and real estate investments. The annual report reviews the year and the economy in general, describes the asset mix, and then discusses the fund's administration and investment operations before providing the financial statements.

The Calculation of health-adjusted life expectancy for a Canadian province using a multi-attribute utility function : a first attempt

This paper presents the application of a health status index to calculate the health-adjusted life expectancy (HALE) for the Ontario population. The paper calculates HALE by combining a life table stationary population with cross-sectional population estimates of self-reported health status from the 1990 Ontario Health Survey. Health status is obtained from the Comprehensive Health Status Measurement System, based on eight health attributes and a multi-attribute utility function which produces an overall health status index score for each individual. The health status for the institutionalized population was estimated using a combination of the 1990 Ontario Health Survey and the 1986-87 Canadian Health and Activity Limitation Survey.

Talented and qualified board members are essential for Canadian corporations, and corporate competitiveness will be negatively affected if excessive or unmanageable liabilities cause such directors to resign and others to refuse to serve on boards. On the other hand, corporate liability, including directors' liability, is an important and effective compliance and risk-allocation mechanism. This paper examines the following issues with respect to improving the fairness and predictability of directors' liabilities under the Canada Business Corporations Act: liabilities, with a focus on wages and fiduciary duties; defense mechanisms, namely whether the Act should be amended to provide for a due diligence defense; indemnification provisions; directors' and officers' liability insurance; the appropriateness of introducing a cap on directors' liability; and the duties of the board of directors.

The first section of the paper concerns data sources, definitions, and sample selection. The discussion of Canada's multinational enterprises begins in the next section with the quantification of the extent of their operations abroad, or the degree of their multinationality. The determinants of whether a firm becomes a multinational and the extent of its multinationality are typically a mixture of firm and industry characteristics. The next section examines several of these characteristics, including firm size, nationality, and diversity, as well as concentration and oligopolistic interaction. The paper concludes with suggestions for further research.

Chemical variability in vegetation samples from the area of the Osborne Cu-Zn deposit, Snow Lake, Manitoba

By M.A. Fedikow. Winnipeg : Manitoba Energy & Mines, Geological Services, 1993. v, 14 p. : Bibl. (Economic geology paper / Manitoba. Geological Services Branch ; EP 93-1) MICROLOG 96-01060 (1 fiche)

This report presents results from a vegetation geochemical survey conducted to examine the chemical variability in twig and needle/leaf samples from the periphery of common vegetation types collected at Snow Lake, west central Manitoba. The investigators collected and analyzed samples representing eight year's growth from the north, south, east, and west sides of black spruce, jack pine, tamarack, birch, and poplar to examine trace and major element peripheral variability. The hypothesis tested was whether ore and ore-related elements are deposited in vegetation tissues as a result of root-specific nutrient supply. The investigation also examined the use of cattails (Typha latifolia) as a vegetation geochemical sampling medium.

Child care continues to be a subject of considerable controversy in Canada. Opinions on child care cover a broad spectrum; from those that support a national child care program to those based on the belief that children are best cared for by the mother in the family home. The fact that more and more women with children are now working full or part-time in the paid labour force means that child care will remain an important social issue for the foreseeable future.

Pour de nombreux jeunes (groupe d'âge 15 à 24 ans), la transition entre l'école et le travail signifie qu'ils arrivent sur le marché du travail sans spécialité, sans expérience, et sans être habitués à la recherche d'un emploi ni au courant des possibilités d'emploi qui s'offrent à eux. Malgré l'intérêt assez marqué que l'on porte au taux de chômage, on parle rarement de la nature et des causes du chômage. Dans ce document, nous cherchons à combler cette lacune, en ce qui a trait au chômage actuel chez les jeunes.

The watershed assessment procedure (WAP) is a tool to help forest managers understand the type and extent of current water-related problems that exist in a watershed and to recognize the possible hydrologic implications of proposed forestry-related development in that watershed. This guidebook explains how to complete a reconnaissance-level WAP analysis for coastal areas in British Columbia according to the provincial Forest Practices Code. The procedure includes compilation on a topographic base map of data relating to peak flow, surface erosion, riparian buffers, landslides, headwaters, and watershed characteristics, then converting the raw data into indicator scores and compiling the scores onto a watershed report card. The guide includes sample worksheet forms and instructions on how to summarize the results in five impact categories and how to produce a hazard index for each category. The appendices include definitions of erosion-prone areas and descriptions of forestry impacts on surface hydrology and erosion.

This paper provides a description and detailed comparison of new data series on job creation and job destruction, constructed using establishment-level data sets, for the United States and Canada. The paper begins with a description of the data sets used and discussion of measurement issues related to job flows. It then examines and compares time-series fluctuations of job creation and destruction in the two countries and disaggregates average annual rates of job creation and destruction by two-digit industry. The subsequent section of the paper develops a simple model of the dynamics of job creation and destruction in order to provide structure for interpreting the similarities and differences in the behavior of job flows in Canada and the United States. The paper ends with basic estimates of the relative importance of country, industry, and year effects.

Concentration statistics as predictors of the intensity of competition

By John R. Baldwin and Paul K. Gorecki. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1990. 36 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 23G)
MICROLOG 96-01385 (1 fiche)

Mobility statistics are direct measures of the intensity of competition, and market structure indicators are indirect measures. In this regard, the most widely employed measure of market structure is the concentration ratio. In spite of the fact that structural measures provide only proxies for the extent of competition, they are widely used by professional economic staff during the formulation and administration of competition policy. This paper examines the appropriateness of this approach. It examines whether the simple impression given by concentration statistics, when used as a summary representation of reality, is adequate in light of the picture provided by other data. Changes in concentration levels for Canada's manufacturing sector are studied, both by examining trends in mean levels of concentration and by estimating changes in individual industry concentration indices. These changes are then compared to the changes as revealed by mobility statistics.

This paper uses unpublished Canadian Family Expenditure Survey data on individuals for 1969-82 to estimate consumption and income age profiles for married-couple families, paying attention to the transition between work and retirement. The paper examines the common assumptions of numerical simulation life-cycle models, namely upward sloping consumption-age profiles and dissaving in retirement, and the assumption that the marginal utility of consumption is independent of the quantity of leisure consumed. The paper also demonstrates the ability of the uncertain lifetime model to rationalize the empirical results and evaluates the suitability of that model as a vehicle for policy simulations.

This paper estimates the contribution that producer turnover made to productivity growth in the Canadian manufacturing sector in the 1970s. It first summarizes the extent to which market share is transferred from growing to declining plants, including both entering and exiting plants as well as expansion and contraction in continuing plants. The paper then measures the relative productivity of the components of the turnover and investigates the different ways in which the contribution of turnover to productivity growth can be measured. Finally, the paper empirically investigates the nature of the replacement process and estimates the contribution of entrants as opposed to turnover in the continuing segment.

Au cours des dernières années, la présence au Canada d'individus qui, en tant que Nazis ou collaborateurs, auraient commis des crimes de guerre en Europe il y a 40 ou 45 ans a soulevé plusieurs questions: Combien de ces individus résident actuellement au Canada? Comment se sont-ils retrouvés ici? Doivent-ils faire l'objet d'une enquête et, éventuellement, de poursuites? Dans ce cas, de quelle façon faut-il procéder pour les traduire en justice? Comme il n'existe aucune étude officielle sur cette question, on a constitué la Commission Deschênes en 1985 pour qu'elle enquête sur ce sujet et en fasse rapport. Ce document porte précisément sur ce sujet.

Critique of Mayhew D.R. and Simpson H.M., 1990, New to the road young drivers and novice drivers : similar problems and solutions?

By Pierre Hirsch and Claire Laberge-Nadeau. Montréal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, Laboratoire sur la sécurité des transports, 1995. 38 p. : Bibl. (Publication / Université de Montréal. Centre de recherche sur les transports ; no. 95-54) MICROLOG 96-01019 (1 fiche)

In their 1990 work entitled New to the road young drivers..., Mayhew and Simpson assembled and synthesized the findings and conclusions of hundreds of conflicting research studies from around the world related to the problem of young driver overrepresentation in car collisions. Their report concludes with a recommendation for graduated licensing as a palatable alternative strategy to the inevitable safety gains from raising the minimum driving age. The present paper examines whether those authors provide sufficient scientific evidence to justify their recommendation and notes examples of biased reporting and logical flaws in their argumentation. The paper concludes with a brief discussion of a deeper bias that potentially influences traffic safety studies.

Cyclical variations in the duration of unemployment spells – 2d rev.

By Miles Corak. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1990. 38 p. : Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 54)
MICROLOG 96-01099 (1 fiche)

The purpose of the research reported in this paper is to examine the hypothesis that after controlling for individual characteristics, the probability of leaving unemployment is invariant over the course of the business cycle. The data used in the analysis are derived from the Statistics Canada Annual Work Patterns Survey for the years 1978-80 and 1982-85. Accelerated life-time models under a variety of distributional assumptions are used to examine unemployment spells from each year of data. Major results obtained include the variation in patterns of change across individual characteristics and the robustness of estimation results across functional forms. These results permit some inferences as to the nature of the adjustment process in the labor sector.

This report presents results from a research project conducted to analyze claim files in the Ontario New Home Warranty Program for the purpose of documenting actual construction defects. The researchers developed a data base that included such information as the location and component involved in the defect, the cause as determined by the Warranty Representative, and the warranty type. The results presented include the distribution of defects by warranty type, by complaint, by location, by component, by cause, by builder size, and by municipality size. The report then identifies the five most common components in terms of both frequency and cost of claim, and estimates the economic impact of construction defects for houses in 1992. The appendix includes graphs illustrating the data collected and sample forms used in the Program's inspection reports.

Demonstration of advanced techniques for multi-radar target tracking

By Timothy M. Sibbald, Eric H. Buller and James K. Tunaley. Ottawa : Defence Research Establishment Ottawa, 1993. 149 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-01014 (2 fiche)

This report describes a demonstration system for combining track information from a number of radar sites. The information is used to form system tracks for the entire area surveyed by the radars, and the target positions and velocities are displayed graphically using earth centered coordinates. The site tracking program is a track-while-scan system that uses a relatively simple algorithm to associate observations with tracks. The system tracker uses the Dempster-Shafer method of data fusion to assign probabilities of association between site tracks and system tracks. Track updating is performed using a Kalman filter. The system tracker was tested using both the Dempster-Shafer method and a Bayesian approach. The system tracker also includes an initial attempt at correcting biases in the site radars. The report also studies the application of a neural network to the traveling salesman problem, a problem related to that of associating data to tracks.

This report describes work conducted to design, analyze, build, and test a tactical direction finding (DF) antenna operating in the 30-500 megahertz frequency range. The antenna assembly comprise two four-element circular arrays of dipole-like vertically polarized antenna elements. The two arrays are optimized for the frequency ranges of 30-110 and 110-500 megahertz, with the higher-frequency array located coaxially above the other. The antenna element outputs are processed in a beam-former unit, and a combiner unit serves to combine the two sum channels and the two DF channels. Test results presented include sum-DF phase and amplitude response, phase error versus frequency versus DF azimuth, sum and DF channel gain versus frequency, and antenna gain. The report ends with a comparison of the design goal specifications and the measured results.

By Linda MacLeod. Edmonton : Alberta Advisory Council on Women's Issues, 1995. 69 p. : Bibl. ISBN 0-7732-1886-6 MICROLOG 96-00958 (1 fiche)

Front-line workers who deal with abused women and abusive men are faced with the problem of identifying, assessing, and reducing the risk associated with abusive men. This report first reviews what is known about the factors that increase the risk of danger from an abuser. It lists and discusses factors that have been used to assess whether the abuser will kill, other factors included in more general risk assessments, and what abused women and front-line workers identify as risk factors. The report then reviews the problems with using risk assessment tools, such as their being viewed as instant answers and their focusing on individuals rather than causes. It also notes what is known about the benefits of such tools. Finally, the report argues for a shift from risk factors to safety strategies and explores ways in which safety management can be included in a risk reduction response system.

The specimens varied in the pattern of the rivet and bolt layout, lap or butt type of joint, and side plate material. In the second phase of tests, the investigators studied the effect and behavior of bottom brackets, bearing plates, and top steel rivet brackets on the performance of riveted connections under a moment. The beamline concept was used to evaluate the viability of the connections in moment-resistant frames. The report includes moment rotation curves of the tested specimens, as well as description and discussion of the specimen behavior during tests, failure modes, and various comparative analyses.

Natural evaporation is one of the available options that can be used to reduce the large volume of fine tailings produced during oil sand processing operations in northern Alberta. Natural evaporation is both inexpensive and technically feasible on a large scale. The process involves complex interactions between the potential atmospheric evaporation demand and the physicochemical characteristics of the tailings. The effects of ponding layers, initial solids content, and atmospheric conditions are not fully understood, and a mathematical model is essential for identifying potentially important parameters and the conditions at which optimum evaporation may be achieved. This report describes such a model, constructed using a modular approach in which water, heat, and solids are the basis of individual modules. It also reports results from experimental validation of the model, conducted using a tank containing tails to simulate evaporation processes under two typical climate conditions in Fort McMurray.

Dimensions of labour market change in Canada : intersectoral shifts, job and worker turnover

By John R. Baldwin and Paul K. Gorecki. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1989. 53 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 25)

MICROLOG 96-01395 (1 fiche)

This paper measures different aspects of labor market change that the Canadian economy has absorbed since 1970 by examining three separate measures of change and relating them to one another. The first set of measures examines the extent of employment shifts between industries, the second consists of job-change measures that capture the extent of employment growth and decline as a result of changes in producer employment levels, and the third set examines the size of and reasons for worker separations. The paper begins with a review of recent studies on inter- and intra-industry change and then quantifies some of the pressures placed on the Canadian labor force by change, in a way that overcomes the deficiencies in the reviewed literature. It then presents and discusses the results of the measurements of labor market change in the Canadian manufacturing sector.

This plan relates to the southeast Calgary community of Dover, comprising about 30 hectares of land originally developed as small holdings and subsequently subdivided into 25-foot lots. Urban development never occurred, and the site is predominantly undeveloped grassland with a few houses, a church, and a fire hall. The plan document outlines the site conditions, the land use policies and plans pertaining to the Dover area, and sets out three components of the proposed plan: a regional park, residential cells, and roads and transit access. The document also discusses the implications of the plan, including population density, the community planning policy perspective, the public participation process, and financial impacts. The appendix contains the Calgary Planning Commissioners' report to City Council on alternatives for collecting the special development charge for the park.

The main objective of the research reported in this paper is to contrast developments in the average duration of unemployment in Canada during the 1990-91 recession with developments during that of 1981-82. The paper introduces a new measure of the average duration of unemployment, the cyclical variations of which are in sharp contrast to those of the average duration of unemployment published as part of the Statistics Canada Labour Force Survey. The paper notes differences in the polarization of unemployment between the two periods studied and also reviews the differences observed when disaggregated data are examined. In particular, the paper notes the dramatic changes in the Ontario labor market. The final section of the paper examines exit rate, or the conditional probability of leaving unemployment, and its variation over time.

There are currently 27 US states that have implemented EDP programs. This report reviews the history of EDP initiatives in the United States and their monetary benefits, the overall EDP process, and the characteristics of successful EDP programs, based on a survey of the US initiatives. A companion document (fiche 96-01294) provides a directory of EDP programs in those 27 states. The report then explores the ways in which the US experience could be implemented in British Columbia, including the design of an EDP program, criteria for referral of applicants to the program, staff training and hiring, reporting structures, client rights, timing of investigations, and linking across offices. The report ends with an outline of an implementation process.

Tree limbs, snags, tree stumps, fallen trees, and upturned root wads all contribute to down woody debris (DWD) on the forest floor. DWD, or material 7.5 centimeters in diameter or larger, may comprise 80% of the above-ground detritus pool in a forest. DWD plays a variety of roles in forest ecology, provides a seedbed for many tree species, and serves as a critical habitat for wildlife. This report reviews the role of DWD in forest ecology and discusses its value as habitat for forest wildlife. It begins with a description of DWD dynamics, including the decay processes of various classes of wood, and then discusses such ecological functions of DWD as nutrient cycling, water retention, erosion control, soil formation, and provision of micro-environments. The report also assesses the natural supply of DWD and the impacts of timber harvesting and site preparation on DWD supply. The report concludes with recommendations for forest management with a view to maintaining adequate DWD supply.

The concept for disposal of Canada's nuclear fuel waste involves the isolation of the waste in corrosion-resistant containers placed in a sealed underground vault. The technical feasibility and the health and environmental impacts of this concept are summarized in an environmental impact statement supported by nine primary references, one of which describes the postclosure assessment. Results from this assessment show that the long-term performance of the reference-case disposal system strongly depends on a design parameter called the waste exclusion distance, or the smallest thickness of rock that separates the waste-emplacement part of the vault from the assumed nearby fracture zone. This report compares results for six case studies in which the waste exclusion distances range from about 1 to 70 meters. The analyses presented focus on radiological impacts from seven radionuclides expected to cause the largest radiation doses over times up to 10,000 years following vault closure.

The work reported involved investigation of the effects of stave radius of curvature and end plate material on the projector performance parameters. The investigators constructed and tested four projectors, three of which had steel end plates and aluminum staves that differed only in radius of curvature. The fourth projector had aluminum end plates and a stave radius of curvature of 20 centimeters (versus 15, 20, and 30 centimeters used in the three other projectors). Measurements were made both in water and in air. The results presented include projector resonance frequency versus stave radius of curvature, in-air and in-water conductance curves, and quality factors.

Parmi les questions que soulève ce problème, trois relèvent de l'intervention fédérale, soit la modification éventuelle du Code criminel, l'utilisation d'un registre fédéral permettant d'identifier les auteurs de mauvais traitements infligés aux enfants et l'insertion dans le Code criminel de dispositions obligeant à déclarer les cas suspects. Ce document se penche sur l'enfance maltraitée et examine particulièrement les droits des enfants, le dépistage précoce des enfants maltraités, l'envergure du problème, le rôle du gouvernement, l'obligation de déclarer les cas d'enfants maltraités, les registres centraux, les initiatives des provinces, et les mesures fédérales.

L'Enquête sociale et de santé de 1992-1993 est une vaste enquête menée auprès de l'ensemble de la population du Québec, afin d'obtenir des renseignements sur la santé, certains problèmes sociaux et les facteurs qui leur sont associés. Les faits saillants présentés dans ce document se divisent en deux parties. L'une reprend les thèmes qui avaient été abordés lors de la première enquête, tandis que l'autre fait place aux réalités sociales dont cette deuxième enquête traite pour la première fois. Dans les deux cas, Santé Québec s'est préoccupé de faire le lien avec la Politique de la santé et du bien-être. Il a de plus comparé les résultats obtenus avec ceux de l'enquête de 1987, en présence d'indicateurs et de questions semblables.

Les ententes de gestion forestière entre le gouvernement et des entreprises privées, qui visent une section précise des terres de la Couronne remplacent les permis existants, et exigent que l'entreprise fasse un aménagement forestier sur une base de rendement soutenu. L'entreprise signataire est responsable de la récolte des produits forestiers, de la régénération et des travaux silvicoles nécessaires à une gestion forestière appropriée, y compris la construction de chemins d'accès. L'entente a une durée de 20 ans, mais le ministre doit évaluer tous les 5 ans la façon dont l'entreprise s'est acquittée de ses obligations. Ici on présente les évaluations détaillées, y compris la procédure de révision et constatations, le maintien de la productivité, la mise en oeuvre des recommandations précédentes, les préoccupations de l'entreprise, et les conclusions et recommandations.

Fisheries habitat managers often require key information on the habitat and environmental requirements of commercial species in order to assess the potential impacts of industrial and other types of development. Such information is often spread over diverse sources and is difficult to access. This document is one of a series that attempts to rectify this situation by making available user-friendly profiles summarizing existing information. This volume on the Atlantic herring, one of the major eastern Canadian fisheries species, reviews its natural history, its environmental requirements in terms of such parameters as temperature and substrate, its economic importance and resource use, and human impacts on the species from such sources as environmental contaminants and pollution, physical disturbance from shipping and dredging, industrial contamination, oil spills, coastal marine structures, and global warming.

Enzymatic hydrolysis of multi-use forage energy crops, year 2 report : studies on the improvement of reaction conditions, differences between forages

The main objective of the work described in this report is to optimize the conversion of forages and crop residues to simple sugars, and to determine the quantity of protein that can be readily recovered after enzymatic hydrolysis of those materials. The simple sugars would be used as substrates for fermentation to fuels and chemicals, and the protein is a potentially valuable byproduct for use as fertilizer or feed. The plant materials studied were kochia, Jerusalem artichoke, pea stem and chaff, oilseed radish, alfalfa, and slender wheat grass. The enzymes used in the hydrolysis were Onozuka R-10, Cellulast 200L Type N, and cello-biase 250L. Results reported include comparisons of enzymatic reactivity of the materials studied, the quantity of protein remaining after treatment, and the dry matter solubility of the materials achieved using the different enzymes.

This paper formulates a passenger equilibrium assignment model for transit networks where it is assumed that passengers travel along the shortest hyperpaths to get to their destinations and that both the passenger waiting times and the passenger distribution between attractive lines at transit stops are flow-dependent. The resulting model is an equilibrium-fixed point model defined on the set of feasible hyperpath flow vectors and the set of feasible arc flow vectors. The paper proves the existence of at least one solution to the assignment model under useful assumptions. It also shows that the model admits a unique solution under more restrictive solutions. Finally, the paper proposes a solution algorithm based on the fixed point successive approximations method.

The importance of agriculture to the Canadian economy, the limited amount of agricultural land available in Canada, and the continuing degradation of Canadian farmland are factors indicating the importance of improving existing information on land degradation. This paper reviews current initiatives toward the development of new improved information on the rates of soil erosion by water. It first presents some background information on erosion and methods of estimating water erosion losses. It then reviews the development of soil loss models using the universal soil loss equation, and describes how Census of Agriculture crop coverage data can be used to calculate one of the components in the equation. Finally, the paper presents an example of application of a tabular method of assessing crop cover and management factors by crop type, and reviews research results for a soil erosion pilot study using the techniques presented.

To support the development of a nearshore habitat management plan for the Bay of Quinte, investigators undertook a pilot study using ground-level and remote sensing inventories of the nearshore habitat of Potter's Point in the bay. They mapped the study area and scored it according to habitat types based on substrate and submerged aquatic vegetation. Each habitat type was assigned two scores representing an index of biotic integrity; a third habitat scoring system was derived from a spawning habitat survey and assigned to each habitat type. The habitat scores were scaled to reflect area weightings and the resulting scores were mapped onto three habitat maps of the nearshore area. The three maps were then combined to produce a map depicting overall scores. This paper describes the habitat evaluation process used in the study. Strengths of the process include its reliance on physical habitat data which is relatively easy to sample.

It has been suggested that an unidentified real factor may be causing persistent shifts in real equilibrium exchange rates. This paper attempts to identify this real factor by examining the ability of real domestic oil prices to account for permanent movements in the real effective exchange rate of Germany, Japan, and the United States over the post-Bretton Woods period. The paper describes a possible rationale for the existence of a simple relationship between real exchange rates and oil prices, beginning with a simple model of a small open economy in which the exchange rate is determined by exogenous changes in the terms of trade. The paper then discusses the potential role of productivity differentials in exchange rate determination and also considers evidence linking oil prices to terms-of-trade shocks. Evidence is presented for a stable long-run relationship between real exchange rates and oil prices.

The need to handle changes in the basis of industrial classification is a perennial problem facing users of establishment-based data. A common strategy is to reclassify to a single version of the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC). This paper evaluates several automated techniques by which a statistical agency can perform that reclassification. These techniques comprise the use of reported commodity detail together with a set of resistance rules, the use of a one-to-one concordance, and the use of a mix of the first two methods. The paper evaluates each technique by using it to reclassify every manufacturing establishment reporting commodity detail in 1982 and then comparing the results against the official assignments for that year. A non-SIC strategy examined involves finding equivalent aggregations entire 1970 and 1980 SIC industries and assigning each grouping a numeric identifier which can then be used to recode the data of any year classified on either basis.

Fall protection for structural steel erection -- 2d ed.

Toronto : Ministry of Labour, 1995. 18 p. : ill., Bibl. French ed. (Protection contre les chutes... sur la même fiche. On cover: Construction health and safety guidelines). ISSN 1201-1444 MICROLOG 96-00760 (1 fiche)

This guideline has been written for constructors, employers, supervisors and workers involved in structural steel erection. It is intended to give them assistance by outlining practical ways of complying with the Regulations for Construction Projects, particularly its fall protection requirements. Its basic message is that fall protection for structural steel workers requires planning in advance that specifies what equipment is to be used and how it is to be used.

The Progressive Conservative government had put considerable emphasis on its policy of controlling the deficit and debt. The current Liberal government is committed to reducing the deficit to 3% of GDP by 1996-97. This paper examines how these two variables have changed over time, the major influences affecting their size and the fiscal principles through which the federal government hopes to control both.

This review examines the trends in federal revenues since the Charter Commission Report of 1967. It discusses the quest for higher revenues in the early 1970s and the reform measures of that decade which later substantially reduced government revenues, and goes on to the Conservative government's deficit reduction measures, which increased the level of taxes, and efforts at tax reform. The review also considers several analytical issues related to taxation.

The longer-term trend in spending originated many decades ago. This paper is concerned with only the more recent growth and explores not so much the aggregate level of expenditures as changes in the various components of spending. It examines those components which account for total expenditure growth and explain why they do so.

Malgré tout l'intérêt que suscite la condition des femmes au Canada, la situation de ces dernières reste pour différente de celle des hommes, entre autres, sur le plan de la rémunération. Il s'ensuit que les femmes risquent davantage de connaître la pauvreté que les hommes, d'où l'impossibilité pour certaines d'entre elles de se soustraire à la violence conjugale. Ce document porte sur la situation économique et autres questions d'actualité des femmes au Canada.

Final report on data quality for the physical condition survey of the public housing evaluation

Ekos Research Associates Inc. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, Program Evaluation Division, 1989. 122 p. MICROLOG 96-00867 (2 fiche)

A physical inspection survey of public housing projects is one component of a major national public housing evaluation being conducted by Canada Mortgage & Housing. This report begins with an overview of the study methodology, including instrument design, inspector training, sampling, and survey administration. It then discusses the complex procedures and plans for data base management and presents a descriptive review of the characteristics of the data collected, including sample characteristics, a statistical profile of the data, problems with missing data, and analyses of data quality. Further sections of the report provide a series of summary statistics on repair cost estimates, physical condition, and maintenance ratings by province and building type; and a summary of the results of a debriefing survey of participating inspectors. The appendices include survey forms and data weighting procedures.

Firm entry and exit in the Canadian manufacturing sector

By John R. Baldwin and Paul K. Gorecki. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1990. 40 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 23A) Paper prepared for Symposium 89 : Analysis of Data in Time.

Using a specially constructed data base from the Canadian Census of Manufactures that allows firms and establishments to be followed over time, this paper presents basic data on the importance of entry and exit of firms. It discusses the conceptual, theoretical, and empirical issues involved in measuring entry and exit and in building a measures of entry and exit in the 1970s and 1980s, focusing on both the size of entrants at birth and on their cumulative effect. It describes the transition path of entrants as they move from a stage of infancy to early adolescence, done by presenting the exit rates of births, their length of life, and the growth path of entrants. In each case, the paper takes care to measure two different types of entry and exit and to compare the performance of each. In particular, entry by acquisition and exit by divestiture are compared to entry by plant opening and exit by plant closing.

The investigators define with this model a gross measure of unexploited single market integration potential, using Box-Cox transformations in the case of an interregional trade model for Europe and North America. The results are compared to those using the usual multiplicative form.

The British Columbia Forest Practices Code specifies planning and operational guidelines for each phase of timber harvesting operations around streams, lakes, and wetlands. This guide describes suitable practices to meet the objectives of the riparian management regulations within the Code, specifically the requirement to correctly identify streams on the basis of fish presence in order to ensure the protection of fish populations and habitats during all phases of forest harvesting. The guide defines the classes of streams distinguished for aquatic ecosystem and riparian zone management, identifies fish species that define a stream as fish-bearing under the Code, and describes factors influencing fish-stream identification such as stream reach, gradient, stream size, natural barriers, and fisheries sensitive zones. The guide concludes with methods for identifying fish streams, including measurement, sampling, data recording, and mapping procedures.

Forest management agreements (FMAs) came into being in Ontario through an amendment to the Crown Timber Act in 1979. The agreements cover a specific section of Crown land and replace existing licensing arrangements with an Agreement which requires the companies to manage the forests on a sustained-yield basis, including responsibility for harvesting, planning, regeneration and other silvicultural activities necessary for proper forest management, including construction of access roads. The agreements are for 20 years but every 5 years the Minister must evaluate how the company has carried out its obligations. These detailed evaluations cover procedures and findings, maintenance of productivity, implementation of previous recommendations, company activities conducted beyond the obligations under the Agreement, stakeholders concerns, and conclusions and recommendations.

This study attempts to compare the earnings of men and women on an equal footing by concentrating on recent post-secondary graduates and using survey data on a number of earnings-related characteristics. The data cover three graduating classes of university and community college students: 1982, 1986, and 1990. The data presented include percentages of female graduates by field of study and degree level; female/male earnings ratios by field of study, program length, industry, and occupation; and earnings by hours of work and by age. A multivariate earnings model was used to analyze the earnings gap, dividing the gap into two components: one which captures the difference in earnings due to the different characteristics of men and women and one which captures the proportion of the earnings gap attributable to differing returns to those characteristics. The earnings model also showed the role that hours of work plays in the earnings gap.

It is speculated that the shift in employment to the service sector, technological change, changes in workforce demographics, contracting out, and other effects are resulting in a polarization of the distribution of wages and earnings, or more workers and jobs at the bottom and top of the distributions and fewer in the middle. This paper examines the degree to which such polarization occurs, using data on employment earnings of full-time, full-year workers from 1967 to 1986. The paper also examines whether the changing age and sex composition of the workforce accounts for this polarization, as well as the degree to which the polarization of the earnings distribution is due to changes in hourly wage rates or changes in hours worked.

The Ontario Central Region growth and yield (G&Y) master plan provides strategic and tactical direction for G&Y activities within the Region, including stratification of the Region for sampling efficiency, data collection standards, and model development. This report begins with a description of the Region, including its ecoregions and vegetation characteristics. It then describes the Central Region G&Y program framework, program structure, and program components, including subprograms such as the Vegetation Management Alternatives Program, cross-regional linkages, G&Y-related variables of interest to program researchers, priority forest cover types of the Region and species associations, the data collection strategy, plot allocation strategy, sampling priorities, and incorporation of existing data. The report ends with an outline of the regional modelling framework, potential modelling products, and priorities for model development. The appendix presents minimum standards for permanent sample plots.

This guide is intended to help district health boards in Saskatchewan consider the option of establishing a community health center as one means of providing health services. It outlines the nature of a community health center, underlying principles of such a center, and the range of services provided in the areas of health promotion and prevention, assessment, coordination and integration, treatment, and care services. The guide then presents the kinds of questions that a health board could ask when deciding on the range of treatment and care services that the center will provide; such services could include physician and nursing services, laboratory and x-ray services, emergency services, and long-term care alternatives. The guide ends by outlining considerations in establishing a community health center. The appendices include definitions, an outline of services delivered by the Dept of Health, and examples of community health centers.

The statistical observation that small firms have created the majority of new jobs during the 1980s has had a strong influence on public policy, but recent research suggests that net job creation in the small firm sector may have been overestimated. This paper addresses various measurement issues raised in the recent research and uses a unique longitudinal Canadian data set that encompasses all companies in the Canadian economy to reassess the issue of job creation by firm size. The paper examines the growth rate of net employment by firm size for 1978-92. It also produces results for various industrial sectors, asks whether the more rapid growth in industries with a high proportion of small firms is responsible for the findings at the all-economy level, and examines employment growth in existing small and large firms.

Hospital discharge data represent an existing data source that may be more useful than occupational health studies in examining some occupational health problems. This study was undertaken to confirm the diagnoses of a subset of cases from an original study (Kusiak et al, 1993) examining the association between pneumoconiosis and coal pulmonary. This study also determined whether the subjects diagnosed as having coal workers' pneumoconiosis did indeed have this condition, since coal mining does not occur in Ontario, and identified the work exposures available in hospital records. The investigators sent forms to Ontario hospitals for 521 subjects who were hospitalized with the conditions of interest in this study, and compared the frequency of diagnoses from the hospitals with that initially found in the Hospital Medical Records Institute data base. The results indicate the degree of accuracy of the hospital record information.

Freshwater from runoff and ice melt leaving Hudson Bay and Foxe Basin through Hudson Strait has the potential to significantly affect the oceanographic properties of not only the Hudson Bay area itself but also regions downstream along the Labrador Shelf. This report is the third of a series, extending previous work on seasonal variability of runoff and ice melt upstream of Hudson Strait for 1963-83. Using the same analysis techniques, this report extends that work from 1984 to 1992 to provide a 30-year monthly mean climate variable. Runoff and ice melt time series are combined for the 30-year period into single freshwater flux signals exiting the Strait, corresponding to three ocean drift speed scenarios. The river runoff and ice melt data in the report are organized into the eight drainage regions previously identified, five for Hudson Bay and one each for James Bay, Foxe Basin, and Ungava Bay/Hudson Strait.

These are 1) the introduction of legislation to reduce the normal refugee determination panel from two members to one member and 2) the creation of an Advisory Committee to assist in the selection of members for appointment to the board. This document looks at proposed changes to the Immigration and Refugee Board. Topics covered are: changing to one-member refugee panels; appointment of members to the board; and, restructuring investigations and hearings by the refugee division.

This report evaluates rural water service systems (pipelines) in rural Manitoba, focusing on the pipeline projects completed in the regional municipalities of MacDonald and Rhineland. The report first reviews past agreements and infrastructure projects in an effort to examine future policy for provision of water service. The report then presents results of a study that involved a survey of a sample of water pipeline service users and a sample of non-users. The survey examined such matters as water consumption and use, current sources of water, the effects of pipelines on water use, attitudes toward the pipeline connection, the impact of the pipelines on quality of life and on the economy and environment of the community, and the personal characteristics of the respondents. The report also compares capital and variable costs of water procurement for the MacDonald and Rhineland systems with those of other rural Manitoba systems.

This paper begins with an introduction on the extent of automobile dependency in the developed world, particularly in North American cities. It then summarizes the various problems associated with such a reliance, including environmental impacts, economic costs, social impacts, and the need for infrastructure. The paper also assesses a number of alternative modes of transport as well as strategies to reduce automobile usage, such as integrating alternative modes at the urban planning stage. Finally, the paper discusses the elements required for more sustainable urban transport practices to occur.

This paper presents an implementation of an infinite dimensional Frank-Wolfe algorithm for solving static, fixed-demand, symmetric, or asymmetric traffic equilibrium problems involving several classes of customers. Each customer class is characterized by its perception of two criteria, time and money. The paper addresses the following issues involved in the implementation: the choice of the error function, the choice of the step size, and the determination of the algorithm for solving the mathematical program. The paper also presents results of numerical experiments using the algorithm on small- and medium-scale road networks.

This report analyzes the files of 41 gang members held in British Columbia's provincial correctional centers. The investigators gathered information about the gang members' family and educational background, the processes of their joining and leaving a gang, their reasons for becoming involved with a gang, and the organization, composition, and activities of gangs. The report concludes with a proposal for a scheme for standardizing the definitions of the various groupings that are called gangs, and a discussion of the multicultural component of gangs and the importance of not focusing solely upon immigration issues when trying to understand the emergence of gangs.

The northern shrimp Pandanus borealis is harvested commercially in the Gulf of St Lawrence, and its abundance is affected by many biological and abiotic factors. Among the control mechanisms for stock abundance, fluctuation in mortality rates in response to environmental conditions at the zoal stages could affect the recruitment level to adult stocks. In this context, knowledge of the metabolic characteristics of the larval cycle is essential; respiratory activity is a valuable indicator of metabolism and is sensitive to environmental stress. This report presents results of measurements of respiration (physiological and enzymatic potential), growth, and protein content on P. borealis larvae. The investigators examined the relationship between oxygen consumption and growth through the larval development under controlled temperature and feeding conditions. The report proposes a quantitative index of the sensitivity of shrimp larvae to environmental stress.

This paper examines the degree of industry efficiency in the Canadian manufacturing sector and the determinants of that efficiency in the 1970s. The first section of the paper outlines the methodology used to measure industry efficiency and the second section examines certain characteristics of the measure. The third section investigates the extent to which this measure is related to the same industry characteristics that were found to be important determinants of efficiency in the Caves and Barton (1990) study of United States industry. The fourth section explores the dynamics of industry change, focusing on the role of turnover with respect to changes in efficiency. The fifth section uses regression analysis to examine the industry determinants of the forces that reduce turnover and the commonalities between the determinants of inter-industry variability in efficiency levels and the forces that lead these levels to change over time.

This study aims to determine the feasibility of an inshore shrimp trap fishery in eastern Nova Scotia, similar to the one conducted in the Gulf of Maine since the 1960s. The investigators used Maine-style shrimp traps to determine the distribution of northern pink shrimp (Pandalus borealis) in Chedabucto Bay by geographic area, depth, and bottom type; to determine seasonal changes in catch rates in areas of greatest abundance, in relation to environmental parameters; to gather information on catch composition by size, weight, sex, and developmental stage; and to compare samples of inshore and offshore shrimp to determine stock origins. Wider-scale information on inshore shrimp distribution was obtained with twelve trawl sets. The report presents the results of the study and makes recommendations for establishing an inshore shrimp trap fishery in eastern Nova Scotia.

Firm turnover occurs both because of entry and exit and because of expansion and contraction in continuing firms. This paper develops measures of change in the incumbent population and compares them to the entry and exit process. In the first case, measures of employment growth and decline are used, and the paper measures rates of change in both the short and long term. In addition to measures of rates of change, the dissimilarity index of market shares in 1970 and 1979 is used to capture the amount of change in relative firm position, which captures the extent to which market share is transferred from losers to winners. Finally, the paper examines whether high levels of entry and exit turnover are associated with high levels of continuing firm turnover and asks whether one process is just an extension of the other.

Introduction of needs-based allocation of resources to Saskatchewan district health boards for 1994-95

Regina : Saskatchewan Health, 1995. 23 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 96-00828 (1 fiche)

Beginning in the 1994-95 fiscal year, district health boards in Saskatchewan received funds allocated by broad service areas instead of by facility or agency. Rather than using historical funding as a basis for allocating 1994-95 funds, Saskatchewan Health introduced an approach that allocates on the basis of the needs of the population. This report reviews the historical funding mechanisms for Saskatchewan health services, the goals of a funding system for district health boards, and the application of the needs-based approach in the province. The report describes the needs-based methodology used and discusses a number of issues involved in its application, including age and gender adjustment, identification of needs via needs indicators, allowance for cost variations, population movement between districts for acute and supportive care, and funding of services for registered Indians. An appendix includes an outline of needs-based resource allocation in other countries.

Job turnover in Canada's manufacturing sector

Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1989. 55 p. : Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 22)
MICROLOG 96-01386 (1 fiche)

This paper measures job change in the Canadian manufacturing sector during the 1970s and early 1980s, investigating the degree to which employment is redistributed between producing units. The paper examines both the job change associated with entry and exit, and that which occurs as incumbent firms grow and decline. The associated redistribution of employment is the result of both interindustry and intraindustry shifts in relative firm size. In investigating job or position change, the paper focuses on two issues: the magnitude of the adjustment absorbed by the economy in the past, and whether there is a pattern to the adjustment process. The former provides a benchmark against which anticipated changes from such causes as trade liberalization can be estimated in the future. Answers to questions related to the latter issue are then used to characterize the nature of the adjustment process normally at work in Canadian manufacturing.

Kingcome TSA timber supply analysis

Victoria : Ministry of Forests, Resource Management, 1995. x, 84 p. : ill., Bibl. On cover: Timber supply review. ISBN 0-7726-2525-5
MICROLOG 96-01332 (2 fiche)

The Kingcome Timber Supply Area (TSA) consists of a total of about 1.13 million hectares of land on both northern Vancouver Island and the adjacent mainland. About 178,000 hectares of the TSA are considered available for timber harvesting and production under current management practices. This analysis assesses how those practices affect the supply of wood available for harvesting over both the short and long term. It also examines the potential changes in timber supply stemming from uncertainties about forest growth and management actions. The appendices include a description of data inputs and assumptions used to derive the timber harvesting land base and to construct the timber supply model for the TSA timber supply review analysis. A glossary is also included.

Labour, the most widely used and valued input in Canadian Production, is exchanged in a market best described as being in a constant state of flux. Recent estimates suggest that approximately five million workers secure employment each year while a somewhat larger number become unemployed or leave the labour market. This document looks at labour market developments and examines the following points: labour supply growth and composition; labour demand; unemployment; quarterly review; and parliamentary action.

This report documents results from the first year of the Lake Erie Biomonitoring Program, initiated in 1993 to establish the status of water quality and trophic production in the lake. The results will be integrated with fish data from the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources to assess the current energetic pathways in the lake and to predict implications for the future of the Lake Erie fishery. The report describes the sampling, experimental, and analytical methods used and provides lower trophic level estimates of abundance, biomass, and production as well as species composition for benthos, zooplankton, rotifers, and phytoplankton. Additional information includes data on chlorophyll-a, Secchi transparencies, phosphorus and other water chemistry components, and estimates of phytoplankton photosynthesis and benthic production for each of three basins in the lake.

The Ecostrip VR-2 paint stripping system employs abrasive media at very low pressure to create a sanding effect. The system includes a low pressure chamber, a motorized and fully controlled media injection valve, a cyclone/media separator, a dust collection system, and a number of attachments designed to address the needs of the surface to be stripped. The Ecostrip system offers an environmentally safe, effective, and cost-efficient alternative to stripping methods such as sandblasting or the use of noxious solvents. This report presents results of field tests of the system in removing lead-based paint from the interior of an old farm house. It includes an overview of current paint-stripping practices, preliminary tests of the Ecostrip system on furniture, a description of Ecostrip operation and performance in stripping the house interior, and levels of airborne lead emissions when the system was used.

Liposome-mediated pulmonary drug delivery promotes an increase in drug retention time in the lung and a reduction in extrapulmonary side effects. This paper reviews issues of formulating and delivering liposome-entrapped agents to the lung as well as protecting the lung from oxidative insults by the administration of liposomal antioxidants. The issues reviewed include liposome stability during nebulization, the stability of different liposome compositions in bronchoalveolar fluid, the use of instillation versus aerosol delivery, and the pulmonary retention of liposome-entrapped glutathione. The discussion of antioxidant therapy focuses on liposomal alpha-tocopherol and its pulmonary uptake, protective effects, and effectiveness in a dual-oxidant bifunctional liposome composition containing hydrophilic glutathione.

AECL Accelerators has installed an IMPELA-10/50 electron beam irradiator in the lotron Industries service center near Vancouver. This paper describes the project management used for the lotron installation as a case study for future installations of irradiators in industrial applications. Construction of the facility, installation of the accelerator and conveyor, and commissioning to the full rated power of 50 kilowatts were completed in 12 months. lotron began commercial irradiation immediately and the first continuous operation achieved 250 hours of production in 12 days. The paper reviews the engineering, production and project management organization and activities used to complete the on-schedule installation and commissioning.

The White Glacier is a mountain valley glacier with an area of nearly 40 square kilometers and an elevation range of 53 to 1,782 meters, located on Axel Heiberg Island in the high Arctic. The mass balance of this glacier has been measured by standard techniques based on the stratigraphic system. This report describes the reassessment of the glacier's mass-balance record, which extends over 32 years. The reassessment involved detailed review of all raw data and tabulated summaries, which revealed a number of recording and processing errors. The report also discusses tests of alternative ways of estimating the mass balance, and compares the White Glacier mass balance with those of other nearby and further-afield glaciers. The next section of the report addresses the wider implications of the White Glacier mass balance, including its value as an index of climatic change. The ap-

Measuring entry and exit in Canadian manufacturing : methodology

The dynamics of the competitive process can be better understood with studies of entry and exit, growth and decline in the incumbent population, the effect of mergers, and the importance of the turnover process to productivity growth. Studies such as these require longitudinal data bases. This paper describes the methodology used to build such a data base using material from the Census of Manufactures. The paper outlines the difficulties involved in constructing a longitudinal panel from data that were not originally collected with such an objective, and describes the choices that were made to resolve those difficulties. The paper includes a broad overview of the data bases and a definition of the exit and entry categories actually used.

Mergers and the competitive process

By John R. Baldwin and Paul K. Gorecki. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1990. 58 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 23E) MICROLOG 96-01397 (1 fiche)

This paper uses a longitudinal data base of establishments and firms taken from the Canadian Census of Manufactures to measure the intensity of mergers and to compare them to other change that leads to firm turnover. The importance of mergers is placed in the context of the plant and firm turnover process by comparing the amount of each merger type to alternate forms of expansion. The paper compares horizontal merger activity to the creation of new plants by continuing firms, and entry by diversification to entry by plant birth. The paper then investigates post-merger success by examining market share, productivity, and profitability changes. When the extent to which acquired plants are subsequently divested is used to evaluate success, this divestiture process is compared to the exit rate of newly built plants. When changes in post-merger market share are examined, a regression is used to examine whether merged plants act differently than other plants. When post-merger productivity and profitability changes are examined, they are compared to what is happening to other plants in the same industry.

Methods for evaluating homeownership

By Andrejs Skaburskis and Marion Steele. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, Evaluation Division, 1994. xiii, 71 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 96-00878 (1 fiche)

The value of home ownership is in part due to the utility the consumer can derive from the unique housing attributes associated with tenure differences, and also due to the linkage of home ownership to notions of self formed by success symbols established by the broader community. This report considers three methods for evaluating the relative advantages of tenure options. It identifies the main attributes associated with those options and assesses the extent to which the three methods can assess the value of the attributes. It begins with listing private and public benefits and costs attributed to home ownership and rental. It then discusses the importance of the context (economic, cultural, physical) of tenure decisions, reviews the theory and application of benefit/cost analysis, and assesses contingent valuation and behavioral approaches for assessing the private net benefits of home ownership.

A Micrometeorology system as it is applied to herbicide volatilization under field conditions

By S.R. Shewchuk and R. Grover. Saskatoon, SK : Saskatchewan Research Council, 1983. iii, 13 p. : Bibl. (SRC technical report / Saskatchewan Research Council ; no. 143) (SRC publication / Saskatchewan Research Council ; no. P-780-5-B-83) MICROLOG 96-01130 (1 fiche)

This report begins with a review of the atmospheric boundary layer and a mathematical model of surface flux used in a computer program for a micrometeorology system employed to define turbulence above a crop. The micrometeorology system consists of a six-level series of anemometers, temperature sensors and polyurethane foam plug samplers. The report then describes field experiments using the system and the computer program for determining diffusivity coefficients in herbicide application.

This report is intended to provide a geoscientific data base that can be used in mineral exploration, resource evaluation, formulation of mineral and land use policies, and initiation of regional development programs in Manitoba. Study methods included site visits to known mineral occurrences, extensive geological mapping of selected occurrences, and synthesis of available data from published and unpublished sources. The report begins with a review of the geology of the study area, which is underlain by rocks of the Lynn Lake greenstone belt in northern Manitoba. It then describes 43 mineral deposits and occurrences in the study area. Information provided for each occurrence or deposit includes deposit or claim name, location, exploration history, geological setting, mineralization, geochemical data, deposit type, and bibliographic and cartographic references.

On cover: Canada-Ontario Agreement Respecting Great Lakes Water Quality.* ISBN 0-7778-4317-X MICROLOG 96-00771 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this study is to use the Ontario Municipal Industrial Strategy for Abatement limits based on best available technology, as well as monitoring regulations data, to update estimates of modelled toxic levels in the Bay of Quinte's water and sediments. The study would then determine whether these limits will adequately protect the Bay's ecosystem, reduce the level of toxic contaminants in the Bay, or restore the Bay's beneficial water uses. This report includes an overview of the model, a multi-component version of the quantitative water-air-soil interaction fugacity model developed by Mackay et al (1983). It also notes the data sources used in the study and presents the results of model simulations for levels of contaminants such as arsenic, cadmium, copper, lead, zinc, pentachlorophenol, dioxins, and furans, and compares the results to study objectives and guidelines. Model-based multifrequency array signal processing for low-angle tracking

By Éloi Bossé, Ross M. Turner and Edwin S. Riesborough. Ottawa : Dept. of National Defence, 1995. 17 p. : ill., Bibl. In IEEE Transactions on Aerospace and Electronic Systems : vol. 31, no. 1, 1995. MICROLOG 96-01011 (1 fiche)

Tracking low-altitude targets over the sea is problematic because of interference between the direct and reflected signal. This paper proposes model-based techniques to deal with the low-angle tracking problem. It describes the algorithms for each of three techniques: refined maximum likelihood (RML), quadrature RML, and maximum likelihood estimation with an angle-of-arrival model. The paper then presents results of a comparative performance evaluation of the three methods using Monte Carlo simulation to examine the effect of noncoherent multipath on performance. It describes examples of experimental target tracking using the ELAT radar and the MARS multifrequency beacon system. The paper also compares the tracking performance of RML and quadrature RML in the presence of diffuse multipath (rough seas), as well as the performance of RML versus a refined propagation model in tracking over smooth seas. This paper describes a new neighborhood structure, embedded within a tabu search heuristic, for solving the vehicle routing problem with time windows. The tabu search exploits an adaptive memory that contains the routes of the best previously visited solutions. This memory is used to create new starting points for the tabu search by combining routes taken from different solutions represented in the adaptive memory. This approach is motivated by similar operators found in genetic algorithms, where two parent solutions are merged to create a new offspring solution. The paper reports a number of best solutions of classical test problems using the proposed methodology.

The island plays a significant boating and low-key conservation role stemming from its relative wealth of historical and archaeological resources. This report describes the existing facilities, land tenures, occupancy rights and jurisdictions, natural resources, visual resources, and heritage resources of the island, and analyzes the existing use of the island as a park or recreational attraction with a view to assessing the island's potential for further development as a park. The report then discusses planning issues related to the degree to which an island park will be developed, the form of development, and the type and extent of marketing efforts related to the park. Finally, the report presents a plan for developing the island to provide recreation opportunities and attract more visitors while preserving its natural and heritage resources.

An instrumentation amplifier with three operational amplifiers is the most common preamplifier configuration for the task of amplifying signals generated by multi-turn coils and electrode pairs for the measurement of electric and magnetic fields. This paper presents a noise analysis of such an amplifier, giving a theoretical basis for the design of low-noise instrumentation amplifiers. The paper describes the models required for the analysis, which are then used to create procedures that perform the necessary algebraic manipulations. Using MAPLE, a symbolic computation package, known sources and loads are connected to the amplifier and outputs are determined. These are then passed to MAPLE subroutines developed to determine the amplifier noise characteristics by manipulating the sources and loads. The report includes results of experimental measurements to confirm the analysis, as well as recommendations to minimize the noise.

This paper describes a three-dimensional numerical flow model of the aquifer underlying the site of a proposed intrusion-resistant underground structure for low-level nuclear waste disposal. The lake is the site of a strontium-90 plume that resulted from an accidental release in 1954 and which has been monitored over its 40-year history. The measured hydraulic head distribution, groundwater velocities, and flowpath of the plume were used to calibrate the model. The paper compares the model results with measurements and estimates from field studies at the lake, and presents results from numerical experiments that examined key flow-controlling parameters. The paper also assesses the applicability of a one-dimensional approach for modelling strontium-90 migration along the principal flow direction, illustrated by reference to analysis of tracer tests and numerical simulations.

This paper considers a bicriterion extension of equilibrium problems formulated as variational inequalities, and proposes for its solution a generalization of the Frank-Wolfe method. Under suitable assumptions regarding the monotonicity of the cost function and assuming reasonable regularity, the paper shows whether the Frank-Wolfe iterates converge to the unique solution of the equilibrium problem. The paper illustrates an application of the multiclass problem in the field of traffic assignment.

Broadband networks, unlike traditional communication networks, have their underlying concepts and technicalities defined beforehand, thereby giving system planners a unique opportunity to design such networks from scratch and to implement design tools so that design decisions can be carefully evaluated. This paper presents a model that addresses the problem of global design of asynchronous transfer mode (ATM) networks. It begins with a literature review which shows that network design approaches have rarely been addressed in a global manner. The paper then formulates a problem of jointly finding the optimal location of the ATM switches, the topology of the backbone and local access networks, the dimension of switches, and the links between switches. A mixed 0-1 integer programming formulation for the problem is proposed and computational results for two examples are presented and discussed.

On the modelling of bus stops in transit networks, part I : a survey of literature and new formulations

By Belgacem Bouzaiene-Ayari, Sang Nguyen and Michel Gendreau. Montreal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports ; Université de Montréal, Département d'informatique et de recherche opérationnelle, 1995. 26 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 96-01082 (1 fiche)

The main goal of this paper is to define a bus stop model which provides an accurate estimate of passenger waiting times and passenger distribution among the attractive lines at any stop where certain specified information is known. The model also assumes that each passenger takes the first available vacant place in a bus which belongs to his set of attractive lines. The paper begins with an introduction to the bus stop problem and a review of existing bus stop models. It then proposes a new general model, studies its main properties, and proposes a fixed-point algorithm to compute the passenger distribution that satisfies the model conditions. The paper concludes with an equivalent variational inequality formulation of the general model which permits the use of variational inequality algorithms to compute a solution to this model. Two special cases of the general model are also suggested.

This paper undertakes a numerical comparison of three main existing transit stop models (the frequency stop model, the residual capacity stop model, and the adjusted residual capacity stop model) and the two special cases of the general model proposed in part I of this study (the new stop model with explicit capacity constraints and the hyperbolic stop model). The present paper simulates a large number of transit stops with different parameters and constructs confidence intervals for distribution probabilities between attractive lines and for passenger waiting times according to the batch means method of Law and Carson (1979). For the same stops, the results of the considered stop models are computed and compared to the simulation results to evaluate the performance of each model.

Ontario's Niagara Escarpment (Ontario, Canada) : implementing the Biosphere Reserve Concept in a highly developed region

By Nars Borodczak. Georgetown, ON : Niagara Escarpment Commission, 1995. 22 p. : ill., Maps For presentation at the International Conference on Biosphere Reserves.
MICROLOG 96-00757 (1 fiche)

The Niagara Escarpment is the most prominent topographic feature in southern Ontario, and is a largely forested corridor 725 kilometers long which passes through the most heavily developed region in Canada. The Escarpment is a significant geological and hydrological feature, hosts many important animal and plant species (including the oldest trees in eastern North America), and was designated a biosphere reserve in 1990. This paper reviews the historical context for the Niagara Escarpment Biosphere Reserve, the Niagara Escarpment Plan as the implementing tool for the Reserve, and land use issues in the Escarpment area. It discusses four issues related to environment versus development: mineral resource extraction, lot creation in rural areas, urban sprawl, and clash of urban/rural values. It concludes with a discussion on public and private issues in the Escarpment.

It focuses on aggregate occupational groups exhibiting active labor markets and which illustrate some of the major trends impacting on the Ontario labor force at this time. For each occupational group considered, the report discusses labor market conditions and education/skill requirements for employability, then summarizes the 1991 census profile for Ontario for that group. The statistics in the profile cover such matters as total employed and average income (by gender), number employed by age group, geographic distribution, number employed by educational level, and number employed by main industry.

Cette étude vise à mesurer les effets du recours au REA sur l'entrepreneur, sur l'entreprise ainsi que sur l'environnement de l'entreprise. Elle a permis de dégager un profil du dirigeant de PME ouvert au recours au capital boursier comparativement au chef d'entreprise qui écarte d'emblée ce mode de financement. Elle a également mis en évidence les effets de l'inscription à la bourse sur la gestion de l'entreprise : implantation d'un système d'information structuré, administration plus rationnelle et vision à plus long terme. Elle a finalement fait ressortir l'amélioration de la perception de l'entreprise par son environnement : celle-ci jouit d'un nouveau prestige dans les milieux d'affaires et elle attire davantage la confiance des investisseurs, facilitant du même coup son accès aux autres modes de financement.

POHEM : a framework for understanding and modeling the health of human populations

By Michael C. Wolfson. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1992. 49 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 44) MICROLOG 96-01105 (1 fiche)

This paper describes a new approach to the development of statistical information with respect to health. It starts with the diagnosis of two fundamental problems in the current set of Canadian health-related statistics: the serious imbalance in coverage between the data on health care system inputs and the health status of the population, and the lack of coherence. These problems are being addressed by the development of a new conceptual framework for a system of health statistics, a central component of which is POHEM (POpulation HEalth Model). The paper provides a general overview of the rationale for POHEM, the construction of POHEM, and recent results, in particular those that allow problems of non-sampling error to be addressed.

POHEM : a new approach to the estimation of health status adjusted life expectancy

By Michael C. Wolfson. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch ; Canadian Institute for Advanced Research, 1991. 28 p. : Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 34) MICROLOG 96-01112 (1 fiche)

This paper describes a general methodology for estimating life expectancy adjusted for variations in health status during the course of individuals' lifetimes: the POulation HHealth Model, POHEM. The paper considers such measures as disability-free life expectancy and the life table methodology on which these kinds of indices are based. It reviews the restrictions embodied in such measures, their underlying methodologies, and the resulting problems, and then describes the POHEM methodology and presents prototypical outputs. The paper argues that the POHEM methodology is not unduly complex and enables provision of a framework for integrating a range of health data and for producing a family of important health indices.

White spruce plantations have been established within the mixedwood portion of the Manitoba boreal forest to provide a long-term supply of sawlog material. Trembling aspen competition within these populations will have a deleterious effect on potential spruce sawlog yields if it is not controlled. This report describes a study conducted to evaluate the herbicidal and silvicultural efficacy of aerially-applied Roundup (glyphosate) in a Manitoba boreal white spruce plantation. The study area was burned over in May 1980, site prepared in September 1981 and hand-planted in May 1982. Three rates of glyphosate were applied aerially in both 1984 and 1985 and data were collected in 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1993. Results presented include trembling aspen mortality versus Roundup application rate, spruce growth response after Roundup application, and the effect of Roundup on grass and other species.

La pornographie, c'est-à-dire toute représentation explicitement sexuelle, n'est pas un phénomène nouveau. Certaines personnes estiment que rien ne prouve de façon convaincante qu'il existe un lien de causalité entre la pornographie et la violence physique réelle, et que les autres effets possibles de la pornographie sont trop ténus ou négligeables pour que l'on attente à bon droit à la liberté d'expression garantie dans la Constitution. Ce bulletin tente de donner un aperçu de ce débat.

Sexually explicit material, or "pornography," is not a new phenomenon. It has existed in some form in virtually every society throughout history. There are people who contend that there is no convincing evidence of any causal relationship between pornography and actual physical harm, and that any other effects are too attenuated or insignificant to justify the infringement of the constitutionally guaranteed freedom of expression. This publication attempts to give a survey of this debate.

The purposes of this report are to identify the magnitude in the expected reduction for the British Columbia health budget in the 1997-98 federal transfer payment; identify and illustrate options to offset the reduction; forecast the impact of these options; and identify significant barriers or constraints to implementing changes within the provincial health system required to compensate for the federal reductions. Relevant information is included on health budgets, federal transfers, and health spending. Three types of options are examined: general across-the-board cuts and/or revenue increases, selected specific and focused cost cuts/service reductions, and downsizing and restructuring the health system. Criteria used to assess impacts on consumers, the health system, and the provincial government include access to services, range and scope of available services, quality of service, cost, and ease and speed of implementation.

Prior Learning Assessment (PLA) : a consultation paper

St. John's : Newfoundland & Labrador Council on Higher Education, 1995. 8 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 96-01151 (1 fiche)

The pace of change in Newfoundland and Labrador has resulted in the need for people to acquire new skills and competencies and to be able to learn in many environments. Many adults are returning to postsecondary education with knowledge and skills gained through life and work experiences, and some find themselves enrolled in courses or programs from which they could be exempted due to prior learning. If the learning is not credited on some formal document, the student may not obtain formal recognition. Another avenue of credit recognition, known as prior learning assessment (PLA), is available and being increasingly used by institutions of higher learning. This paper is intended to provide information on PLA and initiate a broad-based consultation process to develop a provincial PLA initiative. The paper reviews PLA in other jurisdictions, PLA methods, quality assurance standards, benefits of PLA, and issues involving PLA. The paper then outlines a proposed PLA initiative and implementation plan.

The dynamic network equilibrium problem involves the finding of time-varying path flow rates given time-dependent origin-destination departure rates for a time period on a congested network. This paper establishes the equivalence between the dynamic network equilibrium problem and the variational inequality problem, and develops a projection algorithm in function space to solve the problem. The authors conjecture conditions for the existence and the uniqueness of the solution of the problem and the convergence of the algorithm. The paper develops a numerical method based on the polynomial approximations for both the continuous dynamic network loading formulation and the projection iterations. The paper presents computational results for two simplified networks in order to illustrate the convergence process and the satisfaction of the origin-destination first-in-first-out condition.

A survey of traffic accident literature reveals a marked lack of agreement on what constitutes a valid measure of driving safety, as well as an apparent lack of strong support for a single coherent theoretical model to explain or account for the occurrence of driving collisions. This discussion paper suggests that there is a tendency to confuse the interrelated but distinctly different concepts of legal and safe driving. The paper reviews the driver education process and the characteristics of the driver's license examination in relation to acquisition and retention of safe driving skills. The paper then proposes a definition of safe driving, contrasts this with legal driving, and suggests a cognitive approach to collision prevention training and driver licensing based on the teaching of safety protocols.

Les résultats d'une étude nationale sur la protection de la vie privée rendus publics en mars 1993 montrent que les Canadiens ne sont pas insensibles à la menace que les télécommunications et d'autres techniques font peser sur leur intimité. La population réclame d'ailleurs des mesures à cet égard. Dans ce bulletin, nous nous penchons sur les problèmes particuliers que les nouvelles techniques de télécommunication posent pour la protection de la vie privée et nous examinons les différentes solutions envisagées.

This report presents the findings of a review of public libraries in Alberta, the first such review since 1938. The report is arranged by the principles established by the Library Review Committee: access, accountability, service efficiency and effectiveness, and funding. It begins with a vision statement and then summarizes findings and makes appropriate recommendations under each principle. The review included public meetings and hearings, receiving of letters and formal briefs from various interested parties, and examination of documents and legislation from across Canada and the United States. The committee recommendations relate to such matters as development of a communications strategy, changes to the Libraries Act and Libraries Regulation, and a funding structure within existing budget parameters. The appendix includes a list of quick facts about Alberta public libraries.

Property taxes are a major competitive issue for railways, and railway property taxes in British Columbia are much higher than in other provinces. The provincial government is committed to make property taxes for railways fair and competitive while ensuring that no local government bears a disproportionate fiscal burden as a result of any changes in the railway property tax system. A series of regional meetings with local governments enabled the province to hear their views on railway property tax issues. This report reviews those issues and the provincial government rationale for reforming railway property taxes. The report includes the questions most frequently asked during those meetings along with provincial government responses, and proposes an action plan for the discussions, consultations, and decisions that must be taken to implement the any tax reform initiative. The appendix contains an updated discussion paper on railway property tax reform and a listing of proposed reform measures.

Créé en 1984, le Dispositif d'alerte rapide pour les pluies acides (DNARPA) a pour objectif de détecter les premiers signes de dégâts dans les forêts du Canada et de surveiller l'évolution de la végétation et des sols forestiers. Le DNARPA consiste en plus de 100 parcelles. Le personnel du Relevé des insectes et des malades des arbres (RIMA) se charge d'établir les parcelles du DNARPA et d'en faire l'évaluation. Le RIMA doit préciser la nature et l'intensité de tous les dégâts causés à la forêt par des facteurs naturels (insectes, maladies ou conditions météorologiques) ou anthropiques (pratiques d'aménagement ou pollution atmosphérique). Ce rapport décrit l'état de santé des conifères et des feuillus croissant dans les diverses régions du Canada. On traite des méthodes, des écozones terrestres, l'état de santé des forêts et son évaluation, l'état de santé des forêts dans les écozones du Canada (Écozone maritime de l'Atlantique, plaines à forêts mixtes, bouclier boréal, plaines boréales ou de taïga, cordillère montagnarde ou boréale, et écozone maritime du Pacifique). MICROLOG 96-01152 (3 fiche)

This report introduces a new detection criterion designed to operate under the limitations imposed by the resource constraints of real-world detection systems such as radars. The rate-constraint criterion maximizes the detection probability of the test subject to a constraint on the threshold crossing (hit) rate. The report extends the single-stage rate-constraint criterion to the multi-stage case where a number of individual detectors is cascaded and each test is slower but more capable than the previous. A new parameter, the slope of the receiver operating characteristic curve when plotted on log-log axes, is derived and seen to be critical to the performance of a detection system utilizing such a sequence of tests. The report investigates the properties of this parameter for a number of radar target, clutter, and processing models, and presents techniques for dealing with the variance of the hit rate.

Real-time decision problems (RTDPs) are routinely found in a growing number of complex applications that arise in manufacturing, medicine, communication, aeronautics, robotics, transportation, and the military. This paper begins with an illustration of an RTDP in the transportation domain. It also describes functional components of real-time decision systems (limited to semi-autonomous systems that rely on operators for general guidance and major decisions), and reviews recent and relevant developments achieved by the artificial intelligence community in the field of RTDPs. The paper then introduces a general mathematical framework which is later specialized to a vehicle dispatching application to help understand the nature of RTDPs. This section also describes generic problem-solving methodologies developed within the field of operational research that may yield promising avenues for solving RTDPs.

Thistletown Regional Centre, located on the northwest outskirts of Metro Toronto, was originally a convalescent hospital for children and is now a provider of tertiary-level (intensive intervention) mental health care for special needs children. This report presents results of a review conducted to determine whether a decision to close the Centre and redeploy its financial resources to the surrounding regions was the best way to serve the mental health needs of its client population. The review summarizes the incidence of serious mental health problems in Ontario, the history of the Centre and its current programs, and the review process itself. It then discusses eight key issues, including quality of service, research and training capability of the Centre, effectiveness and financial accountability of Centre management, and accountability to the community. The review ends with an analysis of Centre programs and recommendations for improving the children's mental health system.

Dans ce bulletin, nous étudions les tendances des recettes fédérales depuis le dépôt du rapport de la Commission Carter, en 1987. Nous y discutons de la volonté du gouvernement de toucher des recettes plus élevées au début des années 70 et des mesures de réforme prises au cours de cette décennie, lesquelles ont considérablement réduit les recettes gouvernementales par la suite; nous y discutons ensuite des mesures que prend actuellement le gouvernement pour réduire son déficit, lesquelles ont donné lieu à des hausses d'impôt, et des efforts faits en vue d'en arriver à une réforme fiscale. Nous y examinons également plusieurs questions analytiques liées à la fiscalité.

Red-shouldered hawk habitat supply analysis for Bruton and Clyde townships, Algonquin Park, 1990-2000

This report presents results of an analysis of habitat supply for red-shouldered hawks (Buteo lineatus) in two Algonquin Park townships for the 1995-2000 timber management plan being prepared by the Algonquin Forestry Authority. The investigators gathered spatially referenced information on forest cover and other relevant features from the Forest Resources Inventory database, which was enhanced with information on stand structure for those stands that were potentially suitable habitat. They then applied a habitat suitability index model to generate habitat suitability maps and tabular summaries, and used a number of models to project forest growth and inventories. The report presents habitat analysis results for two scenarios involving different sets of timber management allocations.

Redistributing money and power : a guide to the Canada Health and Social Transfer

The Canada Health and Social Transfer (CHST), introduced in the 1995 federal budget, collapses existing federal transfers to the provinces into a single block transfer and reduces the overall level of the transfer. This book argues that the CHST represents a critical initial step in the direction of preserving and promoting a Social Canada. The book starts with an examination of the mechanics of the transition from the status quo to the CHST, with an emphasis on all-province flows. The book then directs attention to the effects on the individual provinces, including the allocation of CHST entitlements and interactions among entitlements and other transfers. It also examines alternative allocation formulas for 1997/98. Finally, the book responds to criticisms of the CHST in the areas of welfare, health, and postsecondary education, and discusses the role of the CHST in promoting an internal social union.

Since 1989, the Division of Vital Statistics has been involved in the analysis of British Columbia's Status Indian population, but does not produce data that measures population by the location of usual residence in the province. This report presents an analysis, by Health Region, of health status indicators for Status Indians. The birth-related analysis was based on live births for 1987-92. In the regional mortality analysis, standardized rates for the Status Indian population are presented for 1992 only, while the number of events is shown for 1987-92. Birth-related data includes live births, total fertility rate, age of mother, Cesarean sections, low birth weight, premature births, and infant deaths. Mortality data includes all causes of death, deaths from cancer, circulatory system disease, respiratory system disease, and digestive system disease, and deaths due to external causes.

The Relationship between mobility and concentration for the Canadian manufacturing sector

By John R. Baldwin and Paul K. Gorecki. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1990. 45 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 23H)
MICROLOG 96-01384 (1 fiche)

This paper investigates the relationship between the picture of the intensity of the competitive process given by measures of market structure in contrast to measures of intra-industry mobility, using a principal component and canonical correlation analysis. The investigation employs a microeconomic data base for the Canadian manufacturing sector that follows plants and firms over time to measure the extent to which there is intra-industry change in relative firm size during the 1970s. The dimension of concentration is related closely to the intensity of entry and exit. The other dimensions of concentration capture the importance of a secondary group of firms and are related to different aspects of intra-industry mobility such as continuing firm turnover. Using regression analysis, the paper demonstrates the significance of entry and exit as a determinant of concentration after scale effects are considered.

In response to concerns that intensive logging of Alberta's boreal mixedwood forests may result in a change in forest structure and biota, this report describes forest structure and composition of plant and animal communities in young, mature, and old aspen mixedwood stands of fire origin in Alberta. The information in this report serves as a reference against which structure and biota in harvested forests can be compared. The report begins with a general overview of the flora and fauna of the aspen mixedwood forest, and an examination of the rationale and possible consequences of commercial aspen forestry. Subsequent chapters explore relationships between stand age and microclimate, forest structure and floristics, down woody material, understory vegetation, nonvascular species, birds, and mammals. Chapters addressing featured species cover ungulates, bats, and the flying squirrel. The final chapters discuss relationships between the vertebrate community and forest structure, and provide recommendations for aspen mixedwood forest management in Alberta.

The serious financial situation of Nova Scotia and the rigorous schedule of governmental cost reductions over the next four years has focused the need to restructure and renew government service. The province's initiatives to reform its public service began with a series of management audits, the first of which was in the Department of Transportation and Communications. This report assesses the recommendations made by the audit report, identifies areas within the department where potential exists for savings in operations or improved service delivery, and proposes a cost-effective organizational structure incorporating the concerns and recommendations of the audit. It outlines possible non-structural efficiencies and the principles for restructuring, and also includes a plan for the implementation of information systems to improve efficiencies and facilitate decision making at the lowest possible level.

The nonprofit society sector in British Columbia is a significant provider of social and cultural services, and suffers from the same kinds of conflict-of-interest problems as the for-profit sector but without adequate or appropriate rules governing conflict of interest. This report presents a review of the basic duties and responsibilities placed on directors of societies, then considers examples of conflict of interest situations in which directors find themselves. It notes that the current legislation governing nonprofit organizations, the Society Act, provides no guidance on conflict of interest or whether particular kinds of transactions should be authorized. Finally, the report summarizes findings of a public consultation on these issues and makes recommendations for revising the conflicts rules that apply to people involved in societies. Sample legislation based on these recommendations is appended.

Report on development of a New England export market strategy for Nova Scotia agri-food products

Market Research Associates. Truro, NS : Dept. of Agriculture & Marketing, 1995. 151 p.
MICROLOG 96-01219 (2 fiche)

This report presents results of a survey of the market perceptions of Nova Scotia agri-food products by New England food trade officials. These perceptions were blended with the results of a previous New England consumer survey of attitudes to Nova Scotia agri-food products to develop an overall export strategy. The report provides insights into the New England agri-food marketplace, and identifies and discusses specific products and/or product categories that have the greatest export potential. The report also identifies barriers to market entry, suggests ways to overcome those barriers, and notes the advantages and drawbacks of a number of alternative export strategies. The appendices include summaries of surveys of Nova Scotia agri-food producers and of New England food brokers, wholesalers, and dealers; results from an interview with the Canadian Consulate General's office in Boston; and United States tariff schedules for food products.

The Multi-Sectional Thermal Manikin Test System consists of a hollow aluminum manikin equipped with temperature sensors and electric heaters connected to a computer system. In operation, the manikin is dressed in human-use apparel and immersed in a suitable environment, and the system then evaluates the thermal insulation behavior of the apparel. This report briefly describes the test system and presents results of tests of Typhoon Ranger dry suits and MAC 10 wet suits under various wave conditions. The results are to be compared with those obtained using human subjects in order to help understand the total effect of water immersion in wave conditions and the performance of survival immersion suits in such conditions. The appendix contains the raw data from the tests.

Saskatchewan Air Quality Task Force. Regina : The Task Force, 1995. 56 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 96-01157 (1 fiche)

The Saskatchewan government created a task force to provide advice on clean air policy. This report identifies the major outdoor air quality issues facing the province and the task force's recommendations to address those issues. The specific issues addressed in the report are acid rain, air toxins, greenhouse gases, ground-level ozone, particulates, stratospheric ozone depletion, and agricultural issues such as dust from soil erosion, pesticide particulates, and smoke and odors from agricultural sources. An introductory chapter gathers together some generic recommendations to reduce duplication in the sections devoted to specific air quality issues and to emphasize some broadly-based concerns such as information and education, conservation, alternate energy sources, economic and regulatory issues, accountability, and public involvement. Includes glossary.

A Review of models of population health expectancy : a micro-simulation perspective

By Michael C. Wolfson and Kenneth G. Manton. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1992. 29 p. : Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 45) MICROLOG 96-01104 (1 fiche)

Various models have been developed to estimate disability-free life expectancy and related indicators. However, these models typically make no explicit reference to underlying disease processes, nor do they allow for much heterogeneity in health status. Other modelling efforts have focused on patterns of incidence and progression of major diseases, and on more detailed health states. This paper reviews selected models of both types, with the objectives of comparing and contrasting their underlying assumptions and developing a common conceptual framework within which all these models can be naturally represented. The framework not only provides a basis for comparison but also indicates a possible direction for a synthesis of these models that can bring together the construction of summary health status indicators and explicit models of risk factor, disease, and related processes. The paper also suggests the operation of this framework using Monte Carlo methods.

Three types of material were studied: annealed, cold-worked in tension, and cold-worked by rolling. Discussion topics include the residual stresses after annealing and after cold working, and the transient growth behavior as explained in terms of the evolution of intergranular residual stresses present in the sample and in terms of the dislocation structure.

This report describes a series of free-flight tests conducted at Mach 2 to verify a sabot design that was used to launch a tandem projectile configuration from a 110-millimeter smooth-bore gun and to obtain detailed trajectories of the projectiles for studying aerodynamic interference effects. The projectiles, of similar profile and size, consisted of a four-fin cone-cylinder model with a length/diameter ratio of 6. The investigators fired two shots at an open range to test the sabot functioning and model-sabot integrity at launch, and two shots in an aeroballistic range. The report analyzes and discusses the sabot separation process, the measured trajectories, and the separation aspects of the trailing projectile relative to the leading one. The report also compares the stability of the tandem models and their aerodynamic characteristics. Detailed flow photographs show the complex shock-wave structure and their interference on both models flying in close proximity.

They are introduced to surface waters mainly in discharges from forest products industries, sewage treatment plants, and agricultural systems. This report reviews the behavior and toxicity of five major groups of chlorophenols in freshwater environments and recommends criteria for the protection of aquatic life in freshwater ecosystems from chlorophenol contamination. The five groups are mono-, di-, tri-, and tetrachlorophenols, plus pentachlorophenol. For each group, the report summarizes its occurrence, environmental fate, distribution in Ontario, and effects on aquatic organisms (including acute and chronic toxicity, plant toxicity, and flavor impairment). The report also suggests research needs regarding aquatic effects of chlorophenols. The appendices include guidelines for toxicity data used in criteria development.

Chlorinated benzenes are manufactured chemicals which can enter the environment as solvents, pesticides, dielectric fluids, deodorants, and chemical contaminants or intermediates. Chlorobenzenes are prevalent in both solid and liquid industrial waste and atmospheric discharges. This report begins with a review of the sources, occurrence, and characteristics of chlorobenzenes, their accumulation and elimination by aquatic organisms, the levels of chlorobenzenes found in aquatic organisms and wildlife, and the toxicity of these chemicals to aquatic organisms and wildlife. Effects of chlorobenzene tainting of water supplies and aquatic organisms are also noted. The report then describes the development of Ontario water quality objectives for chlorobenzenes with the aim of protecting aquatic life. The development relies on quantitative structure-activity relationships based on aquatic toxicity data and hydrophobicity.

The authors demonstrate the implication of imposing long-run restrictions for the stationary multivariate represen-

The authors also compare four different lag-selection criteria and indicate which tests provide more reliable results as the order of the VAR that best approximates the data-generating process increases.

En juillet 1984, la majeure partie de la Loi sur le Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité, créant un nouveau service civil de sécurité et abolissant l'ancien Service de sécurité de la GRC, est entrée en vigueur par proclamation. À bien des égards cette loi vise à mieux contrôler les services de renseignement de sécurité. En effet, elle circumscrit les activités du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité, assujettit l'utilisation des techniques d'enquêtes par intrusion à des mandats judiciaires et crée des organismes de contrôle et de surveillance dont le but est de veiller à ce que le SCRS n'outrepasse pas les limites de son mandat. Setting goals, making and enacting plans : part of the B.C. Life Skills Program to support Career and Personal Planning 8 to 12

Victoria : Ministry of Education, Curriculum Branch ; Rick Hansen Enterprises, 1995. vi, 40 p. MICROLOG 96-01311 (1 fiche)

The BC Life Skills Program was designed to educate students in six critical life skill areas. Effective use of the life skills developed through the Program will lead to a lifelong sense of self-worth, greater personal and interpersonal understanding, and constructive relationships with others. This booklet is the lesson organizer for the sixth of the six life skill areas: goal setting, planning, and enacting plans. The lessons in this booklet will help students learn what goals are and how to set them, distinguish goals that are achievable, learn from mistakes, overcome obstacles, become aware of the benefits of goal setting and planning, and develop implementation plans for their goals. Each lesson contains such elements as curriculum organizers, outcomes, activities, home-community and cross-curricular connections, reproducible worksheets, case studies, and suggestions for assessing student knowledge and ability.

This paper describes a study in which 270 University of Western Ontario undergraduates were asked to indicate the extent to which characteristics could be attributed to individuals on the basis of sex, what members of each sex should ideally be like, and the degree to which these characteristics describe themselves. The results show the degree to which male and female participants agreed that typical males and females continue to have stereotypical characteristics, the degree to which males and females agreed about the nature of the ideal male or female, and the degree of conformity of male and female participants to stereotypes.

SHPHUL can also generate hydrostatic pressure loads due to still water and balance-on-a-wave waterlines. Boundary conditions can be applied and three types of added fluid mass models can be created for the hull. This user manual describes the theoretical basis of the program, the program organization and file structure, program operation, and information on various program options such as section plots, editing of existing models, creating new models, plot assembly, creation of VAST geometry files, and creation of added-mass files. Small communities in Atlantic Canada : their industrial structure and labour market conditions in the early 1980s

This paper uses a new experimental data source developed within Statistics Canada's Business and Labour Market Analysis Group to examine changes in the industrial structure of small communities in Atlantic Canada, and how workers from these communities fared over the 1981-86 period. Communities were classified according to industrial structure and size, and the paper makes comparisons between small and large communities and among communities with different industrial structures. The paper addresses four questions: what differentiates small from large communities in terms of industrial structure; whether resource-based communities became more diversified over the study period; whether workers from small communities faced a more difficult labor market than those from larger centers; and the differences in labor market experiences of workers from four communities with very different industrial structures.

Smoothing procedures for simulated longitudinal microdata

By Jane F. Gentleman, Dale Robertson and Monica Tomiak. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1990. 50 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 32) MICROLOG 96-01100 (1 fiche)

Statistics Canada is adding health characteristics and risk factors to a demographic and labor force model of the Canadian population. This paper describes a method for obtaining multivariate transition probabilities between states for use in advancing individuals in simulated time. The lack of longitudinal data means that these probabilities must be derived from cross-sectional data. The use of transition probabilities by the microsimulation model has the effect of producing smoother, more realistic, logically possible life histories. The probabilities are constrained to maintain consistency with the cross-sectional distributions, and an objective function is chosen to discourage unrealistically large or frequent changes of state over time. The paper uses Canada Health Survey data to generate multivariate transition probability arrays for smoking, blood pressure, cholesterol, and body mass index, all thought to be important risk factors for coronary heart disease.

This publication is a contribution to the understanding of the natural behavior of snowcover. It begins with a chapter on three of the most important physical properties of snowcover: depth, density, and water equivalent, and methods of their measurement. It then examines the areal variability of snowcover and the effects of such factors as topography and vegetation on snowcover distribution; the interception of snow by forests and its sublimation, melting, unloading, and redistribution; wind transport of snow; and the estimation of blowing snow transport and sublimation rates on the western Canadian prairies. The publication ends with a chapter on snow management and control practices in forestry and agriculture.

This paper discusses and clarifies some connections between the descriptive abilities of knowledge representation and natural language. Special attention is paid to the debate about semantic primitives in artificial intelligence in the 1970s, especially the views of Wilks and Winograd. The paper proposes a framework of symbolic description in which the connections made by others are organized and extended, and presents a linguistic view of knowledge representation which supports Quillian's (1967) views of knowledge representation. The paper examines misunderstandings about semantic primitives that killed the 1970s debate and argues that more consensus exists about semantic primitives that is realized.

This guide focuses on what a potential entrepreneur should do before making any investment of time or money in starting a small business in Ontario. It begins with a call for self-examination regarding the implications of starting a business, a glossary of business terms, and a discussion of three different kinds of entrepreneurship: opening an entirely new business, buying an existing business, and operating a franchise. Subsequent sections of the guide cover regulations, registrations, incorporations, and licenses; taxation; patents, trademarks, industrial designs, and copyrights; cer-tification of installations and trades; labor regulations and standards; and sources of further information.

This discussion paper was prepared to identify broad population health strategies on which the provincial, territorial, and federal governments could collaborate and achieve significant results. The paper reviews what is known about the broad determinants of health such as income, social support networks, education, employment and working conditions, physical environments, genetic endowment, personal health practices, child development, and health service availability. It then presents a framework, based on these determinants, that could guide development of policies and strategies to improve population health. Finally, it proposes strategic directions for collaboration in the areas of strengthening understanding of the determinants of health, building support for and involvement in actions to improve population health, and developing comprehensive intersectoral population health initiatives for a few key priorities.

Strathcona timber supply area : rationale for AAC determination effective January 1, 1996

By Larry Pedersen. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, 1995. 48 p.
MICROLOG 96-01396 (1 fiche)

The Strathcona Timber Supply Area (TSA) covers central Vancouver Island and encompasses 660,000 hectares, of which under 250,000 are available for timber harvesting. After a brief description of the TSA, this report reviews the principles for determining the allowable annual cut for the TSA and presents an accounting of the factors and the rationale used in making that determination. These factors include the role of the base-case timber supply forecast, the existing forest inventory, the expected rate of forest growth, the amount of land base contributing to timber harvesting, regeneration delay, areas not satisfactorily restocked, decay and wastage, integrated resource management objectives, the Vancouver Island Land Use Plan, and protected areas. The appendix contains relevant sections of provincial forestry legislation and a summary of public input to the Timber Supply Review for the Strathcona TSA.

This report describes the work performed in application of finite element methods to a structural evaluation of a small waterplane area twin hull (SWATH) vessel, the Frederick G. Creed. The evaluation consisted of a stress analysis of a major bulkhead and determination of the global natural frequencies of the vessel. The analysis was performed by the finite element codes MAESTRO and VAST, using the prescribed displacement method (top down approach). The vibration analysis also used both MAESTRO and VAST. The results presented in the report include the maximum von Mises stress and maximum first principal stress at the bulkhead, the frequencies of the lower hull due to lateral vibration, and the vibration frequencies of the main deck and the cabins.

The paper examines three aspects of change. First, it traces changes in the importance of each sector over the past two decades. It then examines the amount of internal change within each sector, changes in the importance of individual industries in each sector, and the nature of job turnover within industries. Finally, the paper considers the extent to which wage differentials have widened over time.

Between 1968 and 1973, two mining companies obtained core from 17 diamond drill holes located within the interpreted Churchill-Superior Boundary Zone in northern Manitoba, in which major nickel deposits of the Thompson Nickel Belt occur 100-140 kilometers to the northeast. Recent investigations in the Belt have established a detailed lithostratigraphic sequence for Ospwagan Group supracrustal rocks, an economically important sequence containing large nickel deposits. This report presents results of a re-examination of the core from the 17 drill holes which focused on the following questions: whether the holes intersect lithologic units that are texturally, compositionally, and sequentially characteristic of the Ospwagan Group, Churchill, or Superior Provinces; the geographic distribution of the identified lithologies; and whether this distribution provides sufficient data to extrapolate the Belt boundaries under the Paleozoic cover.

Au Canada, le contrôle et la gestion des substances toxiques ne relèvent pas d'un seul palier de gouvernement et nécessitent l'intervention du gouvernement fédéral aussi bien que de ceux des provinces. Il est donc essentiel de coordonner et d'uniformiser le plus possible les efforts déployés. Le succès de ces efforts conjoints dépend en définitive de la qualité des normes établies à l'échelle nationale, de l'efficacité des mécanismes d'application de ces normes et de la capacité des gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux de coordonner leurs activités en la matière. Ce document porte précisément sur le contrôle fédéral-provincial en matière de substances toxiques.

Supportive services in Saskatchewan are intended to supplement individual, family, and community resources to enable people to live as independently as possible. This document describes the policy framework for supportive services, based on two fundamental principles: respect for individual dignity and commitment to the provision of quality care. The document first reviews the purposes of supportive services and the challenges involved in providing these services. It then presents strategies and goals intended to set future directions and actions through a more inclusive decisionmaking process, to meet needs in a more responsive way, and to provide options for individuals, families, and communities. Specific goals include improving access to services, strengthening caregiver support, providing better in-home services, and promoting health and well-being of individuals requiring supportive services.

This document aims to highlight the linkages between principles of sustainable development and processes that support poverty eradication, productive employment, and social integration. The first section links the World Summit for Social Development to the Earth Summit and discusses the way in which the issues of poverty, consumption and production patterns, and national and international equity relate to sustainable development. The second section considers prominent themes central to the Summit, each examined through the conceptual filter of sustainable development, with attention given to the causes and consequences of poverty, unemployment, and social and economic disorder. The concluding section introduces two elements of endogenous responses to problems of sustainable social development, options for macro policy changes, and empowerment for sustainable development.

This report documents the initial technical review of the first phase of the PSA for CANDU 3 reactors. The bulk of the report is an appendix that provides a task-by-task detailed description of the methods employed to conduct or review a Level 1 PSA of a nuclear plant. The review considers three major classes of initiating events: internal, external, and those caused by support system failures. The review also includes methodologies for plant model development, systems analysis, operator actions and recovery actions, data analysis, and analysis of external events.

This document is designed to assist government users in implementing cost-effective security in their information technology environments. It is a technical-level standard for the protection of classified and designated information stored, processed, or communicated on electronic data processing equipment. Sections of the standard cover the seven basic components of information technology security: administrative and organizational security, personnel security, physical and environmental security, hardware security, communications security, software security, and operations security. The appendices list standards for marking of media or displays, media sanitization, and re-use of media where confidentiality is a concern.

La méthode des conflits potentiels automobile-piéton au carrefour a été utilisé dans plusieurs pays. Elle soulève des problèmes de définition et de méthodes. Nous l'avons appliquée à trois intersections de la ville de Montréal pour illustrer son intérêt et ses limites. Une enquête sur la perception du risque de sécurité routière a aussi été menée en parallèle. Les résultats de la technique des conflits et de l'enquête mettent en évidence un carrefour parmi les trois à risque élevé d'accident. Ce document avance des solutions pour corriger cette situation.

This paper investigates the extent to which previously reported findings of the importance of entry barriers depend on the measurement of entry. The paper examines the extent to which estimation techniques, model specification, and measurement alter the conclusion that entry is detrimentally affected by certain industry structural characteristics. The paper focuses on a specific form of entry: greenfield entry by new firms, involving the entry of a firm by plant construction. To test the robustness of the entry model to variation in measurement, two separate dimensions are allowed to vary: the time period and the units used for measurement. The paper measures entry both in the short and long term, using number of entrants, shipments of entrants, average size of entrants, and survival rate of entrants. The paper also examines whether the estimated effect of entry barriers is sensitive to the regression procedure used.

The paper demonstrates the credibility of the model's theoretical properties and compares its results with those obtained by relatively simple generalizations that all include the model as a nested special case. In particular, the paper finds evidence of both modal captivity and asymmetric response that would make a difference to the evaluation of significant service improvements.

This paper examines issues raised for Canadian policy by exchange rate variability. The paper first considers short-term currency volatility and a current proposal for imposing a transaction tax as a method of controlling this aspect of foreign exchange market behavior. It then discusses longer-term currency misalignments and examines popular methods of estimating equilibrium exchange rates, considering their implications for Canadian policy. Finally, the paper evaluates proposals for a target zone exchange rate regime based on such equilibrium estimates. During the discussions, the paper introduces the notion of a fundamental equilibrium exchange rate and uses the concept to provide a benchmark for gauging current macroeconomic policies on the basis of whether such policies yield, among other things, an appropriate or sustainable level of foreign debt.

The control and management of toxic substances Canada has not been assumed by any one level of government and requires the input of both the federal and provincial governments. It is essential, therefore, that efforts are coordinated and made as uniform as possible. The success of interjurisdictional efforts to control toxic substances ultimately depends upon the adequacy of standards throughout the country, the effectiveness of mechanisms to enforce those standards and the ability of the federal and provincial governments to coordinate their efforts in this regard. This document precisely looks at the federal-provincial control of toxic substances.

The main goal of this paper is to test the hypothesis that small firms were responsible for most of the net new job creation during the economic expansion of the 1980s. The paper tests the hypothesis by using several different data sources: the Census of Manufacturing, the Survey of Employment, Payroll and Hours, and a newly developed longitudinal database on firms. The analysis is in five sections. The first covers some of the technical aspects of measuring changes in employment distribution by firm size. The second outlines the magnitude of the shift of job share to smaller firms across all private sector employers. The next sections examine the intra- and inter-industry components of the changes in employment distribution, assess the impact of changes in employer size distribution on average earnings per worker, and offer explanations for the shift of employment share to smaller firms.

This report documents the mathematical development of an analytical well model for describing steady groundwater flow in an idealized, confined aquifer intersected by a withdrawal well. The aquifer comprises a low-dipping fracture zone. The model is useful for making simple quantitative estimates of contaminant transport along groundwater pathways in the fracture zone to the well from an underground source that intercepts the fracture zone. The report outlines the assumptions and method used to derive an exact analytical solution and presents expressions for calculating quantities such as streamlines, hydraulic head, well capacity, and contaminant concentrations in the well water. The report also presents the results of applying the model to a site-specific conceptual model of an area in southeast Manitoba. Predictions based on site-specific parameters and boundary conditions are presented graphically.

The main objective of this paper is to survey the economic literature that examines the labor market effects of the Canadian unemployment insurance program. The paper begins with a description of an idealized insurance model and a discussion of two views on government payments to the unemployed: the use of those payments as a form of insurance or as a form of income transfer. Some of the policy implications of the literature are summarized. The literature review includes both micro-lev-

The literature represents an examination of the marginal costs of unemployment insurance, but those costs still need to be compared to the marginal benefits.

Elastomer seals in nuclear plants must function in types of environments that do not exist in other industries, including ionizing radiation and high ozone levels. In nuclear plant equipment, the elastomer materials supplied are usually identical to those supplied for other industries, sometimes resulting in equipment with seals of inferior or inappropriate materials. The resulting problems with inadequate performance of these seals have prompted integrated approaches for upgrading elastomer seals in nuclear service, with the goal of improving performance, safety margin, and service life predictability. This paper reviews the integrated approach used in Canadian pressurized heavy water reactor plants, including the acquisition of knowledge on elastomer seal compounds, implementing quality assurance procedures, and proper storage and installation. Two case studies of elastomer seal upgrades illustrate the potential for direct and immediate benefits to nuclear plant owners.

FIBER 3.0 is a computer program that predicts the growth of hardwood, spruce-fir, and mixed hardwood-softwood stands in the northeastern United States, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. This report evaluates the performance of FIBER 3.0 in tolerant hardwood stands in different geographic locations in Ontario. The investigators made growth projections for 5 to 20-year periods in managed and unmanaged stands, and evaluated the results of stand growth simulation for each of five data sets by comparing the predicted and observed values of stand density, mean quadratic diameter at breast height, basal area, and volume. The report presents the results and analyzes errors in the predictions for uneven-aged unmanaged stands, even-aged unmanaged stands, and uneven-aged managed stands.

VAST Visualizer user's manual

By David C. Heath, A.D. McCullough and L.E. Gilroy. Dartmouth, NS : National Defence, Research & Development Branch, Defence Research Establishment Atlantic, 1995. viii, 99 p. : ill., Bibl. (DREA technical memorandum / Defence Research Establishment Atlantic ; 95/201) MICROLOG 96-00984 (2 fiche)

This manual describes VAST Visualizer, a three-dimensional interactive graphics program for displaying static and dynamic finite element analysis results and finite element models. The program is capable of directly displaying results produced by the VAST or PATRAN programs, and is easily adapted to display results from any other finite element software. The program may also be used as a powerful preprocessor for the verification of finite element models. Sections of the manual cover VAST Visualizer capabilities and fundamentals, program installation and running, data files, menus, and file formats. Example problems are included to illustrate the program's capabilities in displaying animated dynamic results while maintaining a high level of user control over viewing.

Vegetation management in Ontario's forests : survey research of public and professional perspectives

ISBN 0-7778-4556-3

MICROLOG 96-00748 (2 fiche)

This study reports the results of a series of surveys conducted to examine attitudes and opinions about the environment, risks to the environment, and options for forest vegetation management. The populations surveyed included the Ontario general public, residents of timber-dependent communities, and forest professionals. Questions asked in the survey related to environmental values, forest management goals, risks to health and the environment from vegetation management, trust in science and management, trust and information sources, and the degree of support for vegetation management. The report also describes a covariance structural model that uses data from the survey to test the use of herbicides as a vegetation management option. The report ends with a description of a decision-pathways experiment designed to simulate real-world judgments concerning vegetation management practices. The survey questionnaire is appended.

Les organismes scolaires de la Montérégie ont décidé de hausser la barre de 80 % d'élèves diplômés, objectif proposé par le Plan d'action en matière de réussite éducative sur une période de cinq ans. On entend, dans les meilleurs délais, assurer le succès de tous les élèves confiés aux soins de l'école, soit par l'obtention d'un diplôme, soit par la voie d'une intégration socio-professionnelle satisfaisante. Ce deuxième numéro veut illustrer la diversité des mesures mises en œuvre dans les écoles pour tendre à la généralisation de la réussite des élèves, en mettant en relief la nécessité de quelques évolutions de notre système scolaire.

The Victoria report on physician remuneration, a model for the reorganization of primary care and the introduction of population-based funding : a discussion document

Victoria : Federal/Provincial/Territorial Advisory Committee on Health Services, 1995. 28 p. MICROLOG 96-01376 (1 fiche)

This discussion paper has been prepared to assist in consultations on the development of alternatives to fee-for-service remuneration for primary health care in Canada. The paper presents background information on the current context of primary care, goals for the organization and management of primary care, and a model for the population-based funding of primary care. The model is meant as an illustration of how capitation funding might work, and provides a foundation for future discussion of this issue with an outline of organizational requirements and the fundamental responsibilities of primary care organizations which would receive capitation funding. The paper also outlines the features of a well-run capitated primary care organization from the perspective of the client population, and discusses the implementation of a new organizational model and population-based funding for primary care.

The pilot project described in this report was initiated to demonstrate and evaluate the operational and financial viability of emerging video communication services for distance education and business/technical applications, with a focus on the use of video conferencing at the British Columbia Ministry of Transportation and Highways. The project involved leasing two Picture Tel 1000 video conferencing systems and installing one at the Ministry in Victoria and another at the Nelson regional office. The Nelson site was selected mainly due to its geographic location, adverse winter weather conditions, and the associated travel time requirements and problems. The systems were then used in eleven events including training sessions, technical discussions, and committee meetings. This report describes the project planning, the events held, and findings of an evaluation of the operational viability, costs and benefits of video conferencing.

War criminals : the Deschênes Commission - Rev.

In recent years, the presence in Canada of individuals who may, as Nazis or Nazi collaborators, have committed war crimes in Europe 40 to 45 years ago has raised a number of issues, including: how many such individuals currently reside in Canada; how they came to be here; whether they should be the object of investigation and prosecution and, if so, what means might be used to bring them to justice. Since no authoritative study of these issues existed, the Deschênes Commission was appointed in 1985 to investigate and report on the subject. This document specifically looks at the Deschênes Commission.

What is happening to weekly hours worked in Canada?

By René Morissette and Deborah Sunter. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1994. 46 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 65) MICROLOG 96-01024 (1 fiche)

This study examines whether the dispersion of (or inequality in) weekly hours worked has increased in Canada during the 1980s. Using data from the Labour Force Survey, this paper documents the magnitude and timing of the changes in dispersion of weekly hours which took place between September 1976 and September 1993. The paper considers inequality in weekly hours across individuals, by gender, and in the main job. It then documents in greater detail the decline of the relative importance of the standard workweek, disaggregating the data by age, educational level, gender, industry, and occupation. It also presents potential explanations for the growing dispersion of weekly hours.

When the baby boom grows old : impacts on Canada's public sector

By Brian B. Murphy and Michael C. Wolfson. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1991. 26 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 38) Paper presented to the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe Seminar on Demographic and Economic Consequences and Implications of Changing Population Age Structure. MICROLOG 96-01090 (1 fiche)

The increasing aging of Canada's population is expected to increase the burden on the public sector of major cash transfer and in-kind benefit programs. The estimated size of this burden depends on projections of demographic change, economic growth, and structural aspects of the major age-sensitive public-sector programs. This paper analyzes these burdens for 2016 and 2036, the period when demographic aging may be expected to have its most adverse impacts on old-age dependency ratios and public-sector program costs. The starting point of the analysis is estimates of government taxes and transfers which would have been collected in 1986 had the legislated 1990 tax/transfer system been applied; these results are compared to those from nine projections scenarios. The results indicate the importance of aging and other factors in determining future public-sector costs and revenues.

Although a great deal of attention has been directed to the issue of women's status in Canada, women continue to face conditions that set them apart from men in our society. For example, Canadian women on average continue to earn less than men. This is reflected in the greater risk of poverty for women than for men, which is often linked to the inability of some women to leave violent living situations. This paper looks at the socio-economic status and other contemporary issues concerning women in Canada.

The Young Offenders Act adopts what is known as the "justice" model of juvenile criminal justice. Such a model continues to recognize the special needs and the vulnerability of youth, but also places emphasis on both protection of the public, and the rights of young people. The result is a considerably more detailed and explicit code governing criminal proceedings against youth. This document looks at the Young Offenders Act. The emphasis is less on social intervention, and more on the delineation of rights and obligations.

For many young individuals (those aged 15-24), the transition from school to work means entering the labour market relatively unskilled, inexperienced, unfamiliar with job search and unaware of the job opportunities open to them. Despite the relatively high level of public attention given to the issue of unemployment, this attention seldom addresses the various types of unemployment and their underlying causes. This paper attempts to do this with respect to present-day youth unemployment.

Other Canadian Reference Sources

- Available from Micromedia -

Canadian Index

A comprehensive index providing access to nearly 100,000 citations each year from: eight major daily newspapers, over 200 Canadian trade and business periodicals, over 50 specialized Canadian trade magazines for which indexing is unavailable elsewhere, and more than 350 general periodicals.

KIOSK: CBCA

KIOSK: CBCA is a reference tool which combines a high quality indexing and abstracting database (CBCA) with direct access to the fulltext content of the articles indexed.

CBCA OnDisc

CBCA OnDisc is the Knight Ridder CD-ROM version of the Canadian Index, giving you access to ten years of indexing. It includes every citation in the Canadian Index, plus thousands of informative abstracts which do not appear in the print edition.

KIOSK: Maclean's

Published in cooperation with Maclean's magazine, KIOSK: Maclean's contains every article and news report published by Canada's Weekly Newsmagazine over an eight year period.

CNI Clips: Press Clippings on Microfiche

CNI Clips is a unique service which provides the full text of more than 40,000 Canadian Press news stories and feature articles each year, and is delivered in a practical and economical microfiche format.

Canadian Education Index

Canadian Education Index covers more than 200 Canadian education periodicals, as well as reports and monographs from the educational research community across Canada. In addition, the Index covers report literature from government agencies, educational faculties and teachers' associations, and large school boards.

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus is a bilingual controlled vocabulary of over 5,000 terms, developed for the indexing and retrieval of French or English-language material in Canadian education, and is an invaluable research aid for users of the Canadian Education Index.
